WELCOME!

The Center for Transportation Studies at the University of Missouri-St. Louis is an interdisciplinary, university-wide center, bridging contemporary and historical aspects of transportation, logistics and supply chain management. Supported through endowments created by the St. Louis Mercantile Library and the John W. Barriger III National Railroad Library, the Center offers full and part-time research opportunities to UMSL graduate students, and sponsors the development of academic degree programs through its faculty’s teaching mission.

This brochure is our way of introducing you to our faculty, students, programs, as well as research conducted here at the Center for Transportation Studies. We are extremely proud of our scholars and their research. We hope that you will consider them and other students in the Transportation, Logistics and Supply Chain Management programs here at the University of Missouri-St. Louis when your employment needs arise.

AGTA

The Airport Ground Transportation Association (AGTA) is an association of ground transportation operators, airport authorities, and industry suppliers dedicated to the continuous improvement of airport ground transportation services for the airline traveling public.

Since its founding in 1946, AGTA has been providing its member with industry statistics, news, and policy statements on issues affecting all aspects of airport ground transportation.

CTS is proud to work with AGTA. Located at CTS, AGTA is an integral part of fostering student research efforts and building community partnerships. CTS currently supports the following AGTA-related research studies:

- Smartphone apps as they apply to airport ground transportation
- Fees and fares in airport ground transportation
- On and off-airport parking rates
- Best practices in airport ground transportation
