Dear Neighbors and Community Partners,

First, I am happy to share that I moved into the neighborhood over the summer and am thrilled to be writing to you as a resident of the communities for which we all care so deeply. I look forward to engaging with you in community life as well as continuing the strong university-community partnerships we have built over many years.

Second, school districts and higher education institutions across the region are taking steps towards reopening in various ways. In the coming weeks, you will see more activity on UMSL’s campus as some students return for in-person courses starting August 24th. While we remain ready to transition back to a 100% virtual experience, we have developed practices and protocols to keep students, faculty, staff, and visitors safe as we return. I want to share with you our website (click here) outlining our approach to starting safe and staying safe as our community adapts to operating in the pandemic.

As community businesses, schools, and organizations continue to open and conduct business in new ways, we wish you all health and safety.

Sincerely,

Kristin Sobolik
Chancellor, University of Missouri-St. Louis

UMSL Community Psychological Service Launching New Recovery Group for Adults

The rising death toll from COVID-19 has received regular attention on the nightly news. But often overlooked are those who’ve survived some of the most serious effects of the disease. More than 3,000 people in the St. Louis region have been hospitalized and are still recovering after returning home.

The Community Psychological Service at the University of Missouri-St. Louis is launching a new rehabilitation group intervention to help them through the healing process.

Managing Forward: Courses to Reinforce and Strengthen Your Small Business for the “Recovering from COVID-19” is a psychosocial rehabilitation group designed for adults, ages 50 and older, who are recuperating after extended hospitalizations of three or more nights.

“We know what a really long and arduous process the recovery is,” said John Nanney, the director of the Community Psychological Service and a clinical assistant professor in UMSL’s Department of Psychological Sciences. “There are many symptoms that linger for months after people have cleared the infection, and the hospitalization and medical interventions themselves can be traumatic. Folks – particularly older adults – really need some ongoing support to manage the recovery and address both the physical and psychological toll of the illness.” The weekly sessions are on Tuesday’s and begin at 9:30 a.m. Click here to learn more or email umslcps@msx.umsl.edu or call 314-516-5771.

UMSL Launches Support for Coping with Race Related Stress and Trauma

The nationwide protests that have occurred in the aftermath of the deaths of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, and others have created a renewed dialogue about racism in the United States. But it’s an issue that African Americans, in particular, endure everyday with or without public attention with repercussions for their mental health and well-being.

The Community Psychological Service at the University of Missouri–St. Louis aims to help community members deal with the psychological challenges that racism creates. “Coping with Race-Related Stress and Trauma” is a free group therapy delivered via telehealth over HIPAA-protected Zoom or telephone.

“We know that for African Americans racism and race-related stress and trauma is one of the primary risk factors for mental health issues and suicide,” said John Nanney, the director of the Community Psychological Service and a clinical assistant professor in UMSL’s Department of Psychological Sciences. “There’s really no way to treat African Americans and help African Americans without taking that into consideration. But a lot of other therapies don’t really directly address racism. The point of this group is to directly address the role of racism in the mental health of African Americans and provide some tools for coping.” Click here to learn more. MO Department of Economic Development Small Business Grant

The purpose of the Small Business and Family-Owned Farm Grant Program is to provide grants to small businesses and family-owned farms for reimbursement of costs of business interruption caused by the COVID-19 public health emergency. In addition to focusing on family-owned farms, the Department of Economic Development (DED) is focused primarily on impacting the industries that were hardest hit by the COVID-19 crisis: Retail Trade, Accommodation, Food Service, and Health Care. However, the grant is not limited to these industries. Grants may be up to $50,000. Applicants must incur/have incurred COVID costs between March 1, 2020, and November 15, 2020. Increased COVID-19 Testing Coming to North St. Louis County

St. Louis American - Aug. 3, 2020

More north county residents will have access to COVID-19 testing with CARES Act funding from St. Louis County.

County Executive Sam Page announced Aug. 3 that the Betty Jean Kerr People’s Health Centers will receive $578,000 for COVID-19 testing through the remainder of the year. The centers’ current testing site is in West Florissant at 11642 W. Florissant.

“The BJK People's Health Centers has served the health care needs of the north county underserved community for more than 20 years,” said Dwayne Butler, CEO of BJK People’s Health Centers. “And in this unprecedented time of crisis and concern, this injection of County funding to support and broaden our COVID-19 mitigation and testing efforts in north county, as well as support our general partnership to attend to the health needs of our community, is a great step in the direction of good health and healing.”

Page said the county has committed $4 million of its CARES Act funds to ensure residents in north county receive coronavirus testing. He said additional community partnerships to offer more testing will be announced soon.

For more information or to schedule an appointment, visit BJK People’s Health Centers’ website at peoplesfamilystl.org or call 314-627-5405.
