Graduate School Doctoral Recruitment Fellowship

Graduate School Doctoral Fellowships are intended to attract and recruit exceptional graduate students to enroll in full-time doctoral studies at the University of Missouri – St. Louis and are open to all applicants to doctoral programs. The Fellowship is an award to supplement the Graduate Assistantship given by the department. The graduate program and/or department will determine the exact distribution of the Fellowship funds and service.

Application Procedure:
The doctoral program nominates candidates for the Fellowship. There is no limit to the number of nominations from a program, but it is expected that few candidates will be considered truly outstanding. Interested students may contact the program director to determine whether they might qualify for consideration for the Fellowship. If so, they should send the director a one-page overview that addresses how indicators such as GPA, relevant standardized test scores, previous awards and publications, and previous research might qualify the student for the Fellowship.

Conditions:
1. The Fellowship recipient must enroll full-time in the graduate program.
2. The doctoral program will conduct an annual review of satisfactory academic and scholarly progress of each Fellowship recipient to determine whether or not the Fellowship will be continued.
3. The maximum length any Fellowship recipient may receive the award is four years.

Deadline: There is no submission deadline. Applications are reviewed on a rolling basis.

Nominations must be submitted to The Graduate School electronically (graduate@umsl.edu).
