Asia in the Schools: Preparing Young Americans for Today's Interconnected World	Resource book	2001	"This report is the work of the National Commission on Asia in the Schools, a distinguished group of American education, policy, business, media, and civic leaders brought together by the Asia Society, a leading American nonprofit, nonpartisan educational institution dedicated to fostering understanding of Asia and communications between Americans and Asians. In this book, the Commission presents the most thorough analysis ever conducted of the status of teaching and learning about Asia in our schools. The Panel's most significant finding: There is a huge gap between the strategic importance of Asia-the largest, most populous,	as	49

			and fastest-growing area of the world-and America's disproportionate lack of knowledge about this vital region. This report analyzes the strengths and weaknesses of current teaching and learning about Asian and Asian-American topics in U.S. primary and secondary schools. It sets forth actions needed to improve the quality and broad accessibility of such instruction-actions based firmly on a concern for students' exposure to all regions and cultures." Cited from Asia in hte Schools: Preparing Young Americans for Today's Interconnected World. p. 6-7
Asia: Teaching About/ Learning From	teacher background reading	1978	A "classic," that emphasizes what student can learn from Asia and proposes that Asian studies be used in different ways at different grade levels: (1) elementary- emphasize " the student is the subject", by using Asian studies content to help students develop personal awareness; (2) junior high school- shift to "the process is the subject" and use Asian studies to help students perceive relationships within a culture and	as	4

			apply these insights to their own behavior; (3) high school-concentrate on student mastery of Asian studies subject matter, "the content is the subject." A perceptive guide for teaching about world culture. Includes chapters on Asian American and teaching resources.
