

Weldon Springs group charters land plans

Earl Swift

An 8,000-acre tract of university land near Weldon Springs may be used as a four-faceted educational center according to Ardash Emmons, the University of Missouri's vice-president for research.

Emmons, who served as chairperson of the university's Weldon Springs land use committee, outlined plans for the property at an open meeting at UMSL February 2.

The committee's proposal calls for the establishment of an Archeological Research Center, and Animal Behavior Study Center.

The archeological center might, according to Emmons, include archeological trails, horticultural sites and an operating, modern farm.

Emmons said the area contains at least 200 archeological sites, including the remains of Hamburg, a pioneer town. Emmons said Hamburg might be reestablished as an example of an early midwestern town.

Emmons also stated the university presently operates a farm on the Weldon Springs property.

The animal behavior study would include an area in which facility users could observe the natural habitats of Missouri wilderness. Also present in the center, Emmons said, would be an area set aside to raise rare species of animals. He said the St. Louis Zoo is currently seeking such an area.

A primate colony would also be established. Emmons said the National Institutes of Health are looking for a place to raise monkeys. The colony would apparently be enclosed by a ten-foot, sheet-metal, fence, canted inward.

The third facet of the proposal made by the committee would be the establishment of an Ecological Research Center. This center would consist of a river ecology study site on the portion of the property that borders the Missouri River.

Emmons said the committee would also be interested in the founding of a Bareland Study Area, which would make it possible to observe the effects of pollution on unspoiled land.

The center would also contain a Biological Study Center, and nature trails similar to those at the Archeological Research Center.

The final portion of the proposal calls for the establishment of a Youth Agency Training Center. This center, Emmons said, would be available to train leaders of such youth agencies as Boy Scouts. The center would provide educational programs, a training area for recreational trainers, and a recreation area for study.

"There is adequate space for all of these and more," said Emmons.

The meeting was held after Steve Vossmeier, a Missouri state Representative, charged the university with running a "feudal lordship" by permitting use of the land to persons not affiliated with the university in an arbitrary manner.

According to one source, the university gave permission last year for a business to cut down trees on the property. The university was paid $40,000.

Parking fees pay for police, travel

Dan Crone

Expenditures from UMSL parking funds have been made for salaries, wages, travel and communication, over at least the past four years. University regulations restrict the use of parking fees to maintenance construction of parking lots and garages.

Regulation 11.0408.03 of the "University of Missouri Rules and Regulations" states, "All money collected from parking fees and violation notices goes into a special fund and is used for maintenance of existing parking lots, construction of new lots, and the construction of new parking garages."

The secretary for the Board of Curators, and the General Counsel for the University, confirmed that this regulation is currently in effect.

In fiscal year 1975-76, $25,749 was spent for salaries and wages. John Perry, vice-chancellor for administrative services, said, "Several patrolmen are being paid out of parking (fund)." This is done, said Perry, because "one-half of the patrolmen's time is spent policing parking lots."

Perry also said he does not think Academic Services or General Services accounts should have to pay for the policing of parking lots. When asked about compliance with the university, Perry said, "that regulation will have to be changed."

He said the University-wide administration initiates changes upon the recommendation of the proper campus officials.

According to James S. Newberry, General Counsel for the University of Missouri, "It (compliance with the regulation) is a question of interpretation of 'maintenance'."

Newberry said it would be a "misuse" of funds only if one took a very narrow interpretation of the word maintenance. "It is not unreasonable," said Newberry, "to have those costs that are not associated with building and grounds protection pro-rated to pay for police time."

The second expenditure involves $75,933 spent on travel and communication from 1972 (the earliest year expenditures were itemized in the Financial Report Supplements) to 1976. "Travel and Communication" is the line item classification used in the financial reports of the University of Missouri. The largest of these expenditures was $40,352 in fiscal year 1973-74.

Perry said this expenditure was for the shuttle bus service which ran between the E. J. Korvette parking lot and the Council votes on student fees

Earl Swift

Central Council voted to recommend the university select the third of three alternatives concerning the method in which next semester's fee increase should be handled, at a February 5 meeting.

The group also voted to support the establishment of an optometry school at UMSL.

Council passed a motion to recommend to the Board of Curators that alternative number three, calling for reduced fees for part-time students, be selected as the fee structure after an increase this fall.

The alternative would have students pay $30 per credit hour up to 12 hours. A fee of $360 would be assessed of students taking over 12 hours.

Under the present fee structure, students pay $34 per credit hour up to nine hours, after which a fee of $300 is assessed.

"The main reason we chose number three," said Charles Mays, student body president, is that it offered a more equitable alternative than the present fee structure, because right now part-time students pay around 70 per cent more than full-time students for the same education. It won't make that much difference to the full-time student."

According to Mays, the Columbia and Rolla campuses favor alternative one, under which part-time students would pay

Bond speaks out on politics, civil rights movement

Thomas Taschinger

Politics and the civil rights movement were among topics discussed by Julian Bond, Georgia State Senator, February 1 in J.C. Penney Auditorium.

Bond was a co-founder of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and, in 1968, became the first black ever to be nominated for the vice-presidency.

A near-capacity crowd listened to his speech, titled "What's Next?" which dealt with the political condition of the United States and the legacy of the civil rights movement.

"In 1976," he began, "we celebrated the end of the first 200 years of the American experiment with democracy and the beginning of four years of potentially great promise. The American people wanted a government as good as they thought they were, and so they elected a candidate who said he wanted the best."

Bond, 38, first attracted national attention in 1965 when he was elected to the Georgia House of Representatives.

The House denied Bond his seat because it opposed his views on the Vietnam war. Though it seems difficult to believe now, Bond was not officially seated until two years later, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in his favor. After serving four terms in the House, he was elected to the Georgia Senate in 1974.

"1976 appeared to be the first year in which black Americans finally demonstrated political maturity," he continued. "Ninety-one per cent of the black people voted for the Carter-Mondale team. They provided the margin of victory and more in 13 states, states which gave the winning side 216 of the

New garage may be built

Dan Crone

An additional parking garage may be built at UMSL, according to John Perry, vice-chancellor for administrative services.

The ultimate decision, Perry said, will be made by the Fiscal Facilities and Maintenance Committee and the Fiscal Resources and Long-Range Planning Committee. If the committees choose not to build another garage, a reduction in the $25 a semester parking fee may be possible, according to Perry.

"My preference would be to build another garage," said Perry. He said there are at least two possible sites for a fifth parking garage.

One location is the area "north of the power substation, along the West Campus Drive," approximately across from Bugg Lake. Perry said, "This location would provide student parking on a side of campus where no student parking is presently available."

"A drawback to this site," he said, "is possible turmoil with Bellerive Acres residents." Several houses in that neighborhood, including the Chancellor's residence, have backyards that border on university property.

The second possible place for a garage is in the area known as "the valley." This area is near Lucas Hall where an open parking lot is now situated.

The building of a new garage, Perry said, would permit the "elimination of some surface lots near the Multi-Purpose (Mark Twain) Building." He said with grading and other improvements this area could provide space for intramural fields.

Perry also said he would like to "upgrade the open lots from gravel (the present surface material) to asphalt. This would aid drainage and make snow removal easier in the winter."

All expenditures for the existing parking structures were met during the 1975-76 fiscal year. Parking Structure #4 cost about $1,200,000.

As of July 1, 1977, the fund balance for Parking Improvements and Parking Lot Operations accounts combined was $578,217. The average yearly income from student and faculty parking fees and violation notices is approximately $450,000.

The largest income was $503,359 in fiscal year 1975-76, with last year's income at $454,659.

Religious groups meet here

Mary C. Bagley

Religious-oriented meetings are being held at UMSL by recognized student organizations. There is a university ruling, however, prohibiting the use of campus facilities to student or non-student groups for religious worship or teachings.

According to section 4.0314 .0107 of the "Collected Rules and Regulations of the University of Missouri," "no University buildings or grounds (except chapels as herein provided) may be used for purposes of religious worship or religious teaching by either student or non-student groups."

The Board of Curators' ruling is based on Article One, Section seven of the Missouri Constitution which denies a state university to hold worship or devotional activities on campus.

One of the groups meeting frequently on campus is called Bible Study and is a recognized student organization.

When the group first applied for recognition three years ago, there was discussion as to whether it was a devotional activity to study the Bible. During the group's first meetings, representatives from the administration were present, according to Dennis Patrick, Bible Study Officer.

"Our group represents a fundamental outlook," said Patrick. "We look for simple, literal explanations and their practical applications to everyday life."

"As far as the campus not being used for actual worship activities, I think this is a fair ruling," said Patrick, "but if they try to extend it to say that religious groups cannot have any type of meetings, that is a violation of constitutional rights. What is the difference between us sharing our views as the meditationists share their views?"

Another organization known as the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, which claims to have a function similar to that of the Bible Study Group, has been denied recognition and a room to meet on campus.

The organization formed two years ago and was granted a room and recognition by the Student Activities Office. Recognition was later denied when the group wanted to bring in an off-campus speaker and had to get a permission order signed, according to Bruce Baxter, officer of the group.

Permission was given by Rick Blanton, director of student activities, and Conney Kimbo, dean of student affairs. Baxter then brought the order to John Perry, vice-chancellor of administrative services.

Permission was denied after Perry consulted with the university's lawyer, who advised against signing the permission order, according to Baxter.

Perry feels if a student organization has been holding worship services or teaching religious material, he would deny them a room.

"I have been to the Bible Study's meetings and have found them similar to ours," $39 per credit hour up to nine hours, after which they would pay the full-time rate of $339.

Alternative two, a compromise between the first and third alternatives, would have part-time students pay the present fee of $34 per credit hour up to nine hours. At that point, a student would pay $12 per credit hour up to 12 hours. A fee of $342 would be assessed of full-time students.

According to Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman, 42 per cent of UMSL's student population is part-time.

The motion was moved by Donna Denner and seconded by Paul Free, both representatives.

Council also passed a motion to support establishment of a school of optometry.

Under the proposal, 80 per cent of the cost of a new building and all equipment for the school would be federally funded, and 20 per cent would be financed by the state.

At full capacity, the school would have an enrollment of 210 people. Each 70-seat classroom would be made up of 35 Missouri students. The remaining seats would be sold to other states.

According to Mary Hofer, a council representative who presented the motion, there are thirteen optometry schools in the nation, none in Missouri. Each has a limited number of seats available to out-of-state students.

"The other schools have a certain number of seats that they reserve for students that don't live in that state," said Hofer, "and other states buy the campus. Perry said renting space at Korvette was necessary because construction on Parking Structure #4, the garage located between the General Services and Blue Metal Buildings, was behind schedule. "It would have been inappropriate for the university not to provide parking," said Perry. "The only alternative would have been to limit enrollment."

The shuttle bus service ended with the completion of the parking structure. Expenditures from the parking funds communication are still being made.

Newberry said he was not opposed to the University "spelling out" what the parking fee could be spent for, but said, "I don't see that they (UMSL administrators) have gone outside of the parking regulations."

Meeting gets little heed

Earl Swift

Five of the 45 Central Council representatives attended a Council Conference February 4. Lack of publicity was cited by many of those not present as the reason for their absence, according to Charlie Mays, student body president. "I really expected it," said Mays. "People had told me that they weren't going to come. Others told me that they would be there. "With the time people have spent in the office this semester," he said, "It seems that there is a lack of interest. People haven't been keeping their office hours." The other four members who attended, besides Mays, arrived at different times of the day and stayed for short periods of time. The conference was designed to discuss the group's activities last semester, the future and purpose of student government, new Council programs and revitalization of old programs. The meeting was open to the public, and scheduled from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. "The conference was schedule on a bad day," said Dan Flanakin, a Council representative, "because it seems like the majority of Council members have outside jobs on Saturdays." "I realize that some members have other commitments, and that they can't always make it to things like this," said Mays. "It seems," said Mays, "that apathy at UMSL has started to spread into Central Council."

Fraternity clears sidewalks

Mark Hendel

An UMSL fraternity cleared several sidewalks of snow recently partially because of a delay by the Physical Plant. About eight members of Tau Kappa Epsilon and their president, Robert Haeckel, participated. They cleared the main sidewalk from the University Center to the library, which is worse because of the nearby construction. They also cleared sidewalks behind Lucas and Clark Halls. "TKE clears the way for you" and "This walk cleared courtesy of the TKE fraternity" were some of the signs placed along the different pathways. "We cleared the sidewalks in order to help the physical plant because of the amount of the snow. Also we did it to help the students negotiate some areas," Haeckel said. "We want to make a name for ourselves on campus." "I wasn't aware that anybody but Physical Plant cleared the sidewalks," said Paul Elsea, superintendent of the physical plant. "I didn't know that they did it at all."

John Perry, vice chancellor for administrative services, was also unaware of the fraternity's actions. He gave a few reasons for the delay in clearing snow-covered sidewalks. "The problem with the snow is that if it catches at the right time, it packs, and then it is very hard to get off," said Perry. "The cold weather is not helping because it is not warming enough to chip the ice and snow off. "We do not have enough crews to handle the amount of snow, and some of our equipment has been breaking down," he said. "I appreciate any help given by the students by throwing sand on steps and sidewalks. The help is good and shows cooperation," said Perry.

Perry said a break in the temperature and wrong predictions of more snow would give the physical plant a chance to clear sidewalks completely.

Bus stops eliminated

Bi-State Development Agency's two express bus routes from south St. Louis to UMSL no longer make stops along Interstates 55 and 70 due to low patronage. The stops which have been eliminated, effective January 16, are at I-55 & Reavis Barracks Rd. and I-55 & Bayless on the Mehlville-UMSL Express line; and I-55 & Loughborough, I-70 & Kingshighway, and I-70 & Jennings Station Road on both the Mehlville-UMSL and Willmore Park-UMSL Express routes. Both lines, inaugurated on September 6, 1977, operate Monday through Friday. Mehlville-UMSL Express buses leave the Venture store on Lemay Ferry Rd. at 7:16 and 8:16 a.m. and also take on passengers at Lemay Ferry & Reavis Barracks before proceeding directly to UMSL. Return trips leave UMSL at 2:45 and 5:15 p.m. Willmore Park-UMSL Express buses leave Hampton & Willmore Park at 7:26 and 8:26 a.m. and return from UMSL at 2:45 and 5:15 p.m. These departure times remain unchanged despite the elimination of the stops. Free parking is available at the outer terminals of both lines. Direct service to the UMSL campus is also provided by the extended Mehlville-Clayton Park Ride line which operates Monday through Friday from the Lemay Ferry Venture lot and reaches the campus via the Clayton business district. For further information, call Bi-State at 773-1120.

Holiday rescheduled

March 24, the Friday during Spring Break, has replaced February 20, Washington's Birthday, as an official University holiday. All classes and operations will take place as scheduled Feb. 20, despite calendar listings to the contrary. The change is a result of a recent ruling by the Board of Curators that the Washington's Birthday holiday be eliminated in favor of a holiday the Friday of Spring Break, effective this year. Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman has requested that faculty members call the change to the attention of students.

Senior gets music award

Diane Mohr, a senior at UMSL has been chosen as the 1977-78 Webster Symphony Competition winner. She is a piano student of Evelyn Mitchell, associate professor of music at UMSL. Mohr will perform as the only featured soloist with the Webster Symphony on February 14 in the Loretto Hilton Theatre. She will play the Beethoven Concerto #2 in B flat major, conducted by Allen Larson of the Webster Symphony. Mohr, 22 years old, is majoring in music education at UMSL. She received a scholarship offered by the women's alumni chapter of Mu Phi Epsilon in both her sophomore and junior years at UMSL, the only two years during which she was eligible. Mohr plans to continue her music education, with aspirations of performance, following graduation from UMSL in May. Mohr was also the 1977 winner of the University City Symphony Orchestra competition for which she performed as soloist at Washington University's Graham Chapel last spring. The February 14 concert is set for 8 p.m. and is free.

UE treasurer to speak

Robert O. Piening, treasurer of Union Electric, will speak to the UMSL Business Alumni Association at a breakfast meeting February 17, at the Top of the Seven restaurant, 7777 Bonhomme in Clayton. Piening will speak on "The Current Regulatory Environment: Its Cost to Business and the Public." The meeting will begin at 7:30 a.m.

Minority program here

University of Missouri Curator Marian Oldham and Ronald Stodghill, associate superintendent of the St. Louis Public Schools, will be among the speakers at the annual University of Missouri Minority Admissions Program Sunday, February 12, on the UMSL campus. The program, scheduled for 1:30 to 4 p.m., will be held in the J.C. Penney Building. The purpose of the program is to give minority high school students and their parents the opportunity to learn about academic programs available on all four UM campuses, according to Michael Jones, UMSL assistant director of financial aid and moderator of the opening session. A brief general overview will be provided by Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman. The structure of the program will allow those attending to receive detailed information on programs at any two campuses through half-hour presentations between 2 and 3 p.m. During the final hour, participants will have the chance to ask questions and pick up printed information from representatives of any campus. Additional information is available by contacting the UMSL financial aid office at (453)-5526.

Parking lots a mess, new garage needed

Most students are only too familiar with the sorry state of campus parking lots.

The gravel lots are almost impossible to clear off after a heavy snow. Warm weather rains make them a muddy mess.

Some students, of course, are able to park in one of the garages, a compensation of sorts for taking early classes.

Combined with this sorry state is the problem of lack of needed parking spaces. To add insult to injury, students must pay $25 each semester for parking "privileges."

In light of these conditions it seems absurd that the administration would a) utilize parking fees to subsidize non-maintenance related activities and b) not begin immediate construction of a new parking structure.

According to John Perry, vice chancellor for administrative services, some money from parking fees is being used to pay part of the campus police force. The "logic" behind this situation is that the police spend half their time policing lots. Somehow this action translates as maintenance which, besides construction, is the only thing for which the money can legally be used.

University regulations in this regard are explicit, they state that all money collected from fees "is used for maintenance of existing lots, construction of new lots, and the construction of new parking garages."

The intent of the regulations regarding expenditure of parking fees is clear and maintenance does not entail walking around a parking lot trying to fulfill a parking ticket quota.

As to the question of whether or not a new garage is needed, the answer seems obvious to any student. Student parking is clearly inadequate on the campus.

At this point it is important to note the distinction of student parking. Students provide nearly a half million dollars a year in parking fees, substantially more than faculty and staff members, yet student parking needs go largely unmet.

Proposals for a new parking garage are currently being discussed by various committees. Hopefully, students on these committees will be able to present their case effectively.

Regardless of committee recommendations however, ultimate decision power resides in the upper levels of the administration. In light of the inadequate response to this problem in the past it is indeed unfortunate that the very people who will make the final decisions are unaffected by conditions as they now exist.

Says snow cleared well

Dear Editor:

Concerning Bev Pfeifer Harms' commentary on the conditions of snow removal: maybe, just maybe, if you'd put down your pen and ask Mr. Mitchell or Mr. Kohlberg to give you an explanation of just what they do when it snows, you'd retract your article. Just because you see two men sitting and laughing in a green truck doesn't necessarily mean they work for the grounds crew, mechanical tradesmen, carpenters, painters, janitors...anyone could sit in a green truck.

One of the reasons we're writing this letter is because it sounds as if you're on a high horse and it's only a matter of time before (1) your walls need painting, so downgrade the painters; (2) your tile is loose, write an article on the carpenters; (3) you're a little cold, so the tradesmen get a turn; or (4) your wastebasket is full, kill the janitors.

In our opinion, the grounds crew did a more efficient job of snow removal than any city, county or state department. Here at Marillac, the roads were clear, the parking lots were clear, and the sidewalks were clear. We're not talking about snow drifts — no one can control that.

Maybe if you leave a flag on your beaten path, they can clear that first next time. It sounds like that's what you think they should do.

Members of the grounds crew, we think you did a fantastic job!

The 350 trees that were cut down sold for $180,000.

Vossmeyer also pointed out that a user of the property, Elra F. "Johnny" Green, was convicted in January of child molestation. Green runs a youth camp, patronized on the most part by Boy Scout troops.

Green, 70, was convicted of molesting a scout on the property.

Perry, who has been managing the land for the last four months, said that Green has not been paying the university rent for use of the land, but has spent approximately $80,000 of his money on developing the youth camp.

"In the late thirties a fellow who worked for Brown Shoe Company built a retreat out there," said Perry. "At about 1940 the government condemned all that property, and bought 17,000 acres. They had the Weldon Spring Ordinance Plant there. After the war the government turned over to the Conservation Commission about 7,000 acres. They also turned 8,000 acres to the University.

"Green was in scouting," said Perry. "He got permission from the university to take his scout troop down there."

Green took his troop to an area of the property dubbed the "lost valley", where the retreat had been built in the Thirties, according to Perry.

"These buildings were pretty vandalized," said Perry. "He started fixing up this property. He started living there around 10 years ago."

"He was down there with university approval," said Perry.

"At the present the university has discontinued all scouting activities, all camping. Mr. Green has been told that he's going to have to move."

"The university has not handled some things as I think they should have been handled," said Perry. "They should have gotten some bids on things. But the university had not intent to have anyone gain by this. It was just a matter of judgement, and it could have been handled better."

In addition to the four-faceted educational center, the Weldon Spring Land Use Committee had considered proposals calling for the establishments of a retreat for university faculty, and observatory, and a solar energy demonstration facility on the property.

seats from the school. Missouri doesn't buy too many."

The recommendation followed the filing of a bill by state Senator Harriet Woods in December to establish an optometry school.

There are currently 411 optometrists practicing in the state, many of whom are nearing retirement age. It is estimated that Missouri will require 35-40 new optometrists a year to compensate for retiring doctors.

At a January 20 meeting in Columbia, the Board of Curators adopted a resolution pointing out that if an optometry school were to be established, it should be at UMSL, but that, "this Board respectfully invites attention to the fact that there are not now sufficient resources being made available to adequately support the present programs of the University, and therefore this Board urges caution in the establishment of a School of Optometry until such time as adequate funding for existing programs as well as for the proposed School of Optometry can be provided."

The motion in Central Council was seconded by Jeanne Grossman, student body vice president, and passed unanimously.

The council also passed a motion lending five typewriters from the Central Council offices to the typing room in the University Center.

The typewriters, all manual, are sitting idle in cabinets at present, according to Barb Speier, Council treasurer. They will be loaned to the University Center with the agreement that Council may recall them whenever it is deemed necessary. The motion was seconded by Mary Hofer, and passed by voice vote.

Central Council conducted the first reading on motions to alter the organization's constitutional bylaws so that organizational representatives may send a proxy to meetings.

At present, this option was open only to elected representatives. Organizational representatives have to send an alternate to meetings. There have been complaints from some organizations that their alternates were not sufficiently familiar with Council's work to be able to vote.

Under the new policy, organizational representatives may send an alternate if they wish, or have another regular member of the Council vote for them.

The motion was introduced by Al Goss, chairperson of the administrative committee, and seconded by Bob Henslee, a representative.

In addition, the council elected replacements for vacant curriculum committee chairperson, secretary, grievance committee chairperson and housing referral director positions.

Jean Dickherber was elected by acclamation to the secretary position. The vote followed the resignation of Donna Denner from the post.

In her letter of resignation, Denner said, "It is better that I take this action for right now I am feeling very disillusioned about Executive Council and its officers." The executive committee, referred to by Denner, is made up of the student body president, vice president, the council secretary, treasurer, and chairpersons of standing committees.

Mark Knollman replaced Dan Flanakin as chairperson of the grievance committee. Flanakin cited time commitments as his reasons for resigning.

Joan Wilder replaced J.C. Armbruster as housing referral director. Armbruster resigned his post after the last Council meeting in November.

Cheryl Morgan was elected by acclamation to chairperson of the curriculum committee, to replace Dale Fannin. Fannin transferred to the Columbia campus during the Christmas break.

The Council voted to schedule its next meeting for 2 p.m., Feb. 26.

Baxter said, "What we do at our meeting is to review the Bible the way we would review a work of Shakespeare. We look at it objectively as we would any other work of literature. It is a lot different from a devotional meeting."

Baxter questions the constitutionality of the rule. He believes it conflicts with the U.S. Constitution which gives groups a right to assemble.

"I do not see how they can legally deny us a room," said Baxter. "I feel there is a legal question involved, and next semester we will try to do more about it."

The Historical Setting and Contemporary Black-White Relations, 1860-1978

February 15, 16, and 17, 1978

The University of Missouri-St. Louis invites you to attend this timely three-day conference which will relate new historical interpretations of the First Reconstruction (1865-76) to today's public policy on race relations.

"The First and Second Reconstructions: The Historical Setting and Contemporary Black-White Relations 1860-1978" is the first of a two-part series devoted to analyzing post-Civil War public policies and applying themes from that era to desegregation policies of the Second Reconstruction (1955-present) in such areas as education, housing, and employment.

The conference will feature a number of nationally known historians including C. Vann Woodward of Yale University, the acknowledged dean of historians of the South; Herbert G. Gutman of the City University of New York, author of the recently published book The Black Family in Slavery and Freedom; and Nathan Huggins of Columbia University, author of the critically acclaimed book Black Odyssey.

The conference, which convenes during Black History Week, will meet from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., February 15 through 17 in the J.C. Penney Building on the UMSL campus and carries a nominal $4.50 registration fee.

In order to maximize public exposure to the issues generated by the conference, UMSL has scheduled a special evening session February 15 at 8 p.m. at the Urban League Community Services Center, 1408 N. Kingshighway.

A week after the conference, UMSL will conclude the two-part race relations series by offering a free, public, one-day workshop to discuss issues generated by the reconstruction conference. "Race Relations: Historical Roots and Present Realities" is designed to bring local civic, religious, and school personnel together with UMSL faculty to discuss contemporary desegregation policies in light of their historical roots.

The workshop will be offered twice, February 23 from 4:30 to 9:30 p.m. and February 25 from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. in the J.C. Penney Building on the UMSL campus. Registration will be limited to 50 participants each day.

The race relations series is supported by a grant from the Missouri Committee for the Humanities, Inc., the state-based arm of the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Plan today to attend all or part of this thought-provoking conference and the follow-up workshop.

For further information or to register contact Joe Williams of UMSL Continuing Education-Extension at 453-5961.

Center offers child care at night

Diane Goodman

An alternative to leaving children at home or finding a reliable babysitter in order to come to UMSL during evening hours is UMSL's Child Care Center.

It is convenient and educational for children and doesn't cost those "minimum wages" often required.

According to Kathy Mahon, supervisor of the center, "The purpose of the Child Care Center is to provide quality care for children whose parents must attend school during the evening."

Educational opportunities are available for those who use the center, as opposed to a babysitter at home with the television being the central source of informative entertainment.

"It is an educational training experience while the child is away from home. It is a more informal teaching basis," where no official records are kept on the children, yet interaction in regards to progress and other aspects of their children's stay will exist, according to Mahon.

Currently, the evening program is offered to pre-school children (ages 4-10) of students, faculty and staff members. It is open Monday through Thursday, 5-10 p.m.

Fees are $1.05 per hour for each child, with various billing arrangements.

The program is staffed by two UMSL student teachers who are experienced in childhood education. They provide educational activities to aid in the extension and growth in social, emotional, intellectual and physical development.

"There are a variety of activities to suit each age group, including playdough crafts and finger painting. There is a "gym time" and a nutritious snack afterwards to refurbish their energy source," said Mahon.

After activities, sleepy kids can bed down on cots which are provided. Other children gather around and listen to a story.

UMSL moves in new direction

Bev Pfeifer Harms

Since its beginning in 1960, UMSL has changed direction from a two-year junior college for Normandy residents to a part of the University of Missouri serving the entire metropolitan area.

UMSL is part of a trend across the country — a move to provide a full college education within the urban setting. Urban 13, a group of thirteen urban universities, of which UMSL is a member, is the result of a nationwide effort to afford quality education to students who cannot afford the costs of a traditional college campus.

According to Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman, "The responsibility of the university (UMSL) is to serve a segment of the population that has not had access to college before.

"We aren't taking people away from other area universities like St. Louis or Washington Universities, we are giving those people a chance who normally wouldn't go," he said.

UMSL is part of the effort to provide low-cost, quality education, which is part of continuing-education thrust, according to Don Constantine, director of the Office of Public Information.

While the expansion in physical characteristics is evident, the diversity of UMSL's reach in to the community has continued to expand almost as rapidly.

"UMSL fills a vacuum in accessibility," said Grobman. "Our growth is because I see UMSL as opening a dam and letting a flood in. We serve almost all areas of the population with the programs we now have, though we would like to expand into other areas."

"The challenge of the university," said Constantine, "is to provide quality of education. I think UMSL has sufficiently met that challenge. We couldn't do it at first with our limited budget, but now we have the capabilities and I think UMSL is doing a fine job."

The original property cost $625,000 and was bought by the Normandy area to get "a junior college in the area as an alternative to the higher costs of education in St. Louis' other universities," said Ward Barnes, superintendent of the Normandy School District at the time of the purchase.

Within a few years, it had grown to a full-fledged state university.

Originally, almost all students came from a small area around the Normandy area. Today, students come from a 200-mile radius, UMSL has proven an asset to students from the entire St. Louis area who see UMSL as a way to obtain a college degree without spending a lot of money.

"The obligation of the university is to look carefully at various professional areas where 270 electoral votes needed to win.

"It is now entirely reasonable for these voters to expect their loyalty to be repaid, not just by placing black faces in high places, but by developing plans to eliminate more than 200 years of pathology from their lives," he said.

Bond then pointed out that as recently as 1971, blacks constituted ten per cent of the employed workers in America, but only one per cent of the engineers, two per cent of the physicians, three per cent of the managers and administrators and six per cent of the craftsmen.

In contrast, blacks made up 17 per cent of the service workers, 20 per cent of the laborers and 50 per cent of "the women who make their living in other women's home."

"In the 114 years since Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves," he said, "the lives of black Americans continue to be colored by race. Since Reconstruction, our fortunes have risen, only to fall again, much like the opposite ends of a see-saw."

"We have tried to escape this dilemma through prayer, protest and politics, but we have learned that none of these alone can guarantee salvation," stated Bond.

"The struggle for racial equality has come to some climax over the last 60 years, years of great struggle in the courts complemented by other sorts of struggles in the streets," Bond said.

"What began as a movement for simple civil rights has now largely become a political and economic movement, and black men and women are winning office in numbers only dreamed of before," he said.

Bond's references to the civil rights movement held special significance to him because of the date of his UMSL lecture.

On February 1, 18 years ago, four black college students in Greensboro, North Carolina, began a sit-in at a segregated Woolworth's lunch counter in an effort to be served. They eventually were served, but more important, that incident is regarded as the birth of the modern civil rights movement.

Bond closed his speech by outlining some of his hopes for the future.

"Income and wealth," he said, "must be redistributed through a tax structure which reduces the disparity between the greedy and the needy."

"We must seek the end of poverty through a program of real, full employment supplemented by a negative income tax for marginal wage earners," Bond continued.

"We must have a system of total lifelong education which dignifies vocational as well as academic training and permits each person to realize full potential," he said.

"We need free, cradle-to-grave health care for all, financed through the national treasury, not by profit-making insurance companies," said Bond.

"These goals hold the promise of no perfect world," he said, "but do hold out the hope that we may create a system of laws and relationships between us that promises more than the present system of privilege for only a few."

Following his talk, Bond answered questions from the audience. Several persons seemed interested in Bond's future political plans.

"My only immediate goal," he said, "is to be re-elected to the Georgia State senate. At the present I don't think I have a constituency that will elect me to something beyond that I don't want to move to someplace else just to advance politically. But of course no one knows what the future will bring."

Several times Bond expressed disappointment with the Carter administration's moves to help blacks. He felt Carter was moving too slowly in crucial social areas and was wrong in waiting to balance the national budget before experimenting with social programs.

One person asked Bond if he had reconsidered his earlier opposition to Andrew Young joining the Carter Administration.

Bond said, "When Young first considered joining the administration, I was afraid that he would get a 'nothing' job and that he wouldn't be adequately replaced in Congress.

"His replacement in Congress was a disappointment but Andy Young is doing a fine job as U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. At least he's the first U.S. Ambassador who knows that there is an African continent south of the Sahara," he said.

Later that day Bond held a press conference for representatives of the local media. In response to a question about

Republican efforts to gather more black votes nationwide he said, "The problem with Republicans is that they want black support without having to give anything in return."

"Republicans have a lot of money and one thing they can do is create 'instant candidates.' These new black candidates aren't Abraham Lincoln Republicans or Barry Goldwater Republicans, they're Republicans of convenience," said Bond.

Over 42 per cent of the students who attend UMSL do so on a part-time basis. This includes those who participate in regular classes, as well as those in the UMSL Downtown program and the extension classes.

"If we don't offer courses downtown, people couldn't take them," Grobman said, "This is the only contact these people have with UMSL and these courses help in their current jobs."

UMSL is only a small part of the overall move to urban higher education, yet it represents one of the first such efforts. Administrators, according to Grobman, are always looking for ways and programs to reach more students and more areas of the population.

COURTROOM DRAMA: Father Rivard [David Faulkner,] the maverick priest, runs on...

'Runner' doesn't stumble

Michael Drain

Slowly, yet constantly, the fog rolls over the thick forests and consumes every living thing by suffocation and isolation; then, as if stirred by the knowledge that nothing has survived, it recedes back into the night. It is in this desolate environment that Father Rivard and Sister Rita make their attempt at survival in the Loretto-Hilton's latest production, "The Runner Stumbles."

Father Rivard, a priest who has fallen into disfavor with the Cardinal, has been sent to a parish that has not had a priest in over ten years as a punishment. The highly Protestant area presents a challenge to Father Rivard, played by David Faulkner, not only in day to day living, but in spiritual suffocation.

He starts a school and has two nuns helping him teach. Both contract consumption, so he sends for another, Sister Rita, played by Cara Duff-McCormick.

She is an inconstancy in such a bleak environment. She sees flowers instead of dense forests and birds instead of fog.

Over the years Father Rivard has become like the environment that he lives in, dark and troubled. Pressures and inconstancies attack him at every turn, and Sister Rita is no exception. He is now on the defensive.

When Sister Rita is told she can no longer stay in the same building with the two sick nuns she is forced to live with Father Rivard and his housekeeper Mrs. Shandig (Mary Fogarty).

Fire breaks out in the town and a trench is dug through Sister Rita's flower garden to save the church. This is something Sister Rita cannot take. She falls into the trench in grief over the flowers. She loses the last signs of life and the one person she has ever loved, and cannot take any more.

Mrs. Shandig, who loved Father Rivard and hated Sister Rita because she was taking him away from his work and making him do evil things, sees her in the pit and decides she is like a snake. She buries Sister Rita and pounds the earth with a shovel whenever it moves.

Father Rivard is then on trial for the murder. The play is constantly goes back and forth between the trial and actual events. The audience is the jury.

The story is based on an actual event at the turn of the century in Travers City, Michigan. This city is a logging town and surrounded only by dense forests of pine. The whole play takes place during the winter and fall, when the area seems at its worst, because people are confined to their houses. The gray winter provides the only color.

The play, written by Milan Stitt while in the Yale Drama school, is well written. Director Norman Gevanthor adapted the rather complex scenes of the play to the stage well. The transitions from the cell-courtroom to the living quarters of Father Rivard were smooth and consistent, with a minimum of distraction from the action of the play itself.

The gray set, designed by Heidi Landesman, was simple, adding to the bleak desperation of the environment of the characters of the play.

The coldness of the set combined with the coldness of the lighting even made the audience feel surrounded by a suffocating fog and dense forests.

The acting, in general, was good. Especially notable was Duff-McCormick. She added the only hope of happiness in the play and when she was overcome, we all lost hope.

Faulkner did a remarkable job in portraying a character suffering not only from a suffocating environment but from a disordered mind which thought everything and everyone was bent on his destruction.

Both performers were at their best in the scene when they finally realized they are in love but cannot do anything but run from it.

Even in realizing the housekeeper actually killed Sister Rita, the audience is left with the feeling it really was Father Rivard's fault Mrs. Shandig killed her and the cold atmosphere that forced him into his desperation. There is no real resolution to the play.

Dying art of comedy given new life on PBS

Maureen Corley

The 1977-78 season is one of commercial television's worst and of all the types of programming, television comedy has suffered the most. It has become a dying art.

Innovative comedy, however, is alive and well on St. Louis' public television station, Channel 9.

In addition to the long-running "Money Python" series, Channel 9 offers new shows such as "Que Pasa, U.S.A.?", "Fawlty Towers" and "Wodehouse Playhouse," as well as a touch of "The Best of Ernie Kovacs."

Remember the Cleavers and the Nelsons? How about the Bunkers and the Cunninghams? For a variation of the family sit-com, "Que Pasa, U.S.A.?" presents the Penas, a three generation Cuban-American family in Miami. Instead of worries about dating, drinking or driving, the Penas face culture shock as they make a new life in a new country. "Que Pasa, U.S.A.?" airs at 6:30 p.m., Sundays.

From one of the slightly insane comic minds that brought "Monty Python" to the air comes "Fawlty Towers," 9 p.m. Mondays. John Cleese, who played stiff-upper-lipped British generals, twits and gumbies, now portrays Basil Fawlty, the inept proprietor of a seedy resort hotel where World War III is always imminent.

"Fawlty Towers" is 30 minutes of inspired lunacy, will all of the exotic satire and slapstick humor of "Monty Python" harnessed into a very British, very funny sit-com. Cleese moves at a breathless pace throughout the series as the hyperactive Basil.

Peter Lennon of "The Sunday Times" said: "John Cleese has a quality which is invaluable for any comedian; his movements are funny...He seems to be holding Fawlty Towers together like some kind of demented

spider." Try it for something completely different.

If this type of British humor doesn't agree with you, take a look at "Wodehouse Playhouse," 7:30 p.m., Saturdays, a series of playlets based on the stories of P.G. Wodehouse.

"Wodehouse Playhouse" best serves as an introduction and a whimsical tribute to the humorist, whose prolific career spanned almost 75 years, from the publication of the first of over 900 novels, short stories and essays until his death at 93 in 1975.

The exotic names of Wodehouse's characters (such as Freddie Fitch-Fitch, Tuppy Glossop and Sacheverell Mulliner) conjure up nostalgic images of quaint English society not unlike Fitzgerald's flappers and philosophers of the twenties — a society that probably never really existed, if only in our imaginations.

The series stars John Alderton and Pauline Collins, both of "Upstairs, Downstairs" and "No, Honestly" fame. "Wodehouse Playhouse" is a delightful showcase for the unique, low-key wit of Wodehouse, who once remarked: "With the exception of the late Atilla the Hun, there is probably no more forceful personality than the typical English nanny."

For a look back at comedy in the early days of television, when live broadcasts and black-and-white were the rule rather than the exception, watch "The Best of Ernie Kovacs," 9:30 p.m., Mondays.

An innovative genius in video, Ernie Kovacs (who died in 1962) was known by millions for his off-beat humor, wild characterizations and bizarre sight-gags and black-out sketches. Where else on television could you see Percy Dovetonsils, the tipsy poet-laureate who proclaims at the beginning of each show, "Greetings over your orthicon tube?"

Technically, as well as aesthetically, Kovacs was ahead of his time. "What made Kovacs as immediate standout was his way of using the medium itself as a part of his comedy...he had begun exploring the various electronic capabilities that the TV studios had to offer and to develop special camera techniques that nobody else had tried," said creative director John Lollos. "The effect was marvelous."

Compiled from thousands of feet of videotapes and kinescope film, the series provides an entertaining look at a unique comic talent that set the pace for shows from "Laugh-In" and "Monty Python" to "Saturday Night Live." This is the show that asks, "Do B-57's eat their young?"

OUT OF MY WAY: UMSL's Carl Walton fights off two Culver-Stockton Wildcats for an offensive rebound and eventual lay-up in the second quarter of the Rivermen's 89-62 victory over the Wildcats [photo by Sam Smith].

Rise and fall of the Rivermen empire continues in high gear

Sam Smith

As they say in basketball, you have your ups and downs, and the basketball Rivermen experienced both within four days.

The UMSL cagers beat the Wildcats from Culver-Stockton College, 89-62 and promptly lost to the Southeast Missouri State Indians, 82-59, in two completely different games.

Against Culver-Stockton, the Rivermen played well despite having only a 32-25 lead at the half. The major problem, according to head coach Chuck Smith, was underestimating the Wildcat team.

"I think that we weren't really well prepared to go out," said Smith, "and we didn't realize that they were that good of a ball club."

Two of the players cited for not being ready to play were Grayling Tobias and Mike McCormack, starting guards. Smith said their play wasn't up to par and a change was made.

"Our two guards (Tobias and McCormack) weren't really moving us the way I thought that we should be moved," said the UMSL coach, "and I believe that our substitution, of putting (Lamont) Shannon and (Brad) Scheider in there, got us going a little bit."

The "shake up" worked. Tobias and McCormack returned to action just before halftime, as the Rivermen rattled off six unanswered points to lead 32-25 at intermission.

As Smith explained, "I really feel that if you've got players who aren't performing the way they're capable of performing, you've got to go to your bench and bring in some people who are willing to go 100 per cent."

During the break, according to Smith, a few words of wisdom were passed from the coaches to their players, telling them how to put the game away.

"We tried to go over with the guys that we've got to take the game to them, really apply full court pressure, and try to speed up the tempo and the fast break," he said.

Women win easily; men sink in loss

Paul Adams

Last Saturday the UMSL men's swim team lost to Washington University, 75-38. The women defeated Wash. U. 83-45.

Coach Monte Strub commented, "I was sorry to see the men lose but it was not an unexpected loss. The women were very good, they soundly defeated the Wash. U. women."

Conrad Philipp won the 1000-yard freestyle and Vince Burke won the 200-yard breaststroke. The men also won the 400-yard medley relay which includes 100-yards each of the backstroke, breaststroke, butterfly and freestyle. Rick Kloeckner swam the backstroke, Vince Burke raced in the breaststroke, John Althoff swam the butterfly and Bob West competed in the freestyle.

Althoff broke the 200-yard freestyle record. Althoff trimmed two seconds off the record, with a time of 1:55.5. The old record was 1:57.5, set in January, 1976.

The women on the other hand, won all but two events in the meet. Alice Anne Sander led [See "Swimmers," page 16]

Riverwomen stay winless; lose 80-21

Vita Epifanio

The long and frustrating season continued for the Riverwomen after Friday's loss to an aggressive Western Illinois University team. The score was 80-21.

According to Coach Carol Gomes, "The team played very poorly. Nobody had pep or vitality; there was a complete deadness."

Once again, the Riverwomen had trouble moving the ball. The top scorer was freshman Liz Helvey with seven points. "We couldn't get the ball to Pat Conley," Gomes said. "In fact, nobody seemed to want the ball."

They managed only five field goals the whole game. In the second half, they could score only three points, all on free throws.

Defensively, the team failed to play with the same zest of a week ago. In rebounding, Conley led with seven.

If their performance was a problem, officiating was another. "The officiating was one of those home-jobs," Gomes remarked. "This got us down early, but officiating didn't lose us the game. Our poor play did."

Without a doubt, the coach and the players have felt the toll [See "Riverwomen," page 16]

TAKE THAT: Dave Eswine, the Rivermen's 118 pound wrestler, seems to be winning in his match against Millikin U. As it turned out, Eswine lost the tough match, one of the very few he has lost all season [photo by Sam Smith].

Confusion surrounds mat men

Sam Smith

There was some confusion associated with this year's wrestling team. There was confusion as to who wrestles for the team, and Friday night, there was confusion as to who the team was wrestling.

"The way it was set up," said senior wrestler and co-captain Vince Lobosco, "Millikin (University) was to wrestle at Washington University at 4 p.m., then come down here to wrestle us and Meramec (Community College) at 6 p.m. Well, it ended up they wrestled two schools at Wash. U. and that moved it back an hour, then they got lost in the process of coming to the school and that messed it up even more."

The long delay, more than an hour, meant long discussions between the wrestlers from UMSL and Meramec. The wrestlers and coaches became impatient at the delay, wanting to start without Millikin.

"We were about ready," said Lobosco, "to just go ahead and wrestle Meramec and call it a night after that. But they (Millikin) finally showed up and we wrestled them because the dual meet with them actually counted. It was only a J.V. meet with Meramec."

Lobosco added, because of the delay, the wrestlers were all at the same disadvantage.

He said, "Sitting around can sometimes get you a little frustrated, mess up your day, but then Millikin had also wrestled two matches. They were switching their lineup in and out, and I think that kind of evened things up."

As has been the case for the entire season, personnel has been scarce. The fact that everyone on the team has a job means there are times when they won't all be present. There have also been injuries.

"We've had injuries that have hurt us all season," said Lobosco. "We've had a couple of people who'd be scoring points, team points, and with those team points we could definitely have won some meets we lost."

With the rash of injuries, the Rivermen's dual meet record has fallen to 6-8, mostly because they've had to either forfeit matches or fill in with inexperienced people.

Said Lobosco, "Some of those kids don't have that much experience. Maybe they wrestled in high school. But they're not state champions or runners-up, and they're not coming from good programs in high school. They're just kids who're interested and willing to work hard. They're progressing very well."

Lobosco also pointed out while the team isn't winning every time out, the UMSL wrestling team is still growing and improving.

Our 39th Year

That wasn't all that was done during the break, either.

"We got some adjustments made at halftime," said Smith. "We changed our pressure defense a little bit, and I think that was the difference in the game."

The defense came out and shut down the Wildcats in the second half, while the offense finally got on track. After Culver-Stockton scored the first two points of the second half, the Rivermen scored the next 20, to take a 52-27 lead. The rest of the way was UMSL's as they completely emptied their bench.

Said Smith, "We're glad when we can play a lot of people. All of the players in uniform work hard in practice. Their big enjoyment comes from playing in the games. We like to play everybody we can, when we can."

But clearing the bench lasted for only one game. Everything that went right for the Rivermen against Culver-Stockton went wrong against SEMO.

Coach Smith explained, "We didn't play very well. They came out playing extremely well, hitting their first three shots while we missed our first three attempts."

That sounds bad enough, but...

"Before we knew it, about five minutes into the ball game we were down 21-6. We were down by 19 at the half," said Smith.

Four days can make a lot of difference. The Rivermen, who scored 67 points in the second half alone against Culver-Stockton, hit only 30 per cent from the field and scored just 59 points against SEMO.

"It was very much unlike what happened to us when we played Culver-Stockton," said Smith. "We hit only 30 per cent from the field and you don't win any ball games hitting that low a percentage."

The pressure defense that worked so well the previous game also failed as the Rivermen's season record fell to 9-10.

Said Smith, "We started with the same kind of defense (the full court press), but Cape's players are a lot better than Culver's and playing at home as they were, they just had the attitude that 'We can beat UMSL let's just pour it on them.'"

The attitude of SEMO seemed to tell something about the game; the game just wasn't meant to be for UMSL.

But the Rivermen will try to turn things around when they meet Western Illinois University on Saturday. The Rivermen will try to revenge a five-point loss to the Leathernecks earlier in the year.

Riverwomen

of a long season. Gomes mentioned "they are merely going through the motions."

She continued, "When my team loses, I blame myself. I'm not doing something, but I just don't know what it is."

When asked if UMSL would continue competing the the first division next season, Gomes said, "I'm seriously considering dropping down to division two status. This way we can start building a program and compete with teams of the same caliber."

the women by capturing the 500-yard freestyle and the 50 and 100-yard backstroke. Pat Wilson also contributed victories in the 50, 100 and 200-yard freestyles. Julie Mank added points to the team's victory by capturing the 50 and 100-yard butterfly. She also won the 100-yard breaststroke. Carol Wechsler won both the required and optional diving events.

Sturb commented on the women's performance saying, "The girls did a terrific job. Earlier in the season they had defeated Washington University women, 67-61, in a scrimmage. Their recent 83-45 victory shows how much they have improved this season."

The men's next meet will be against the University of Chicago and Illinois College Friday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Mark Twain (Multi-Purpose) Building.

The women will hit the water Saturday at noon, thier opponent will also be the University of Chicago.
