Miss Redbird: celebrity behind the cash register

By ANN TELTHORST
Current Staff Writer

It might be, it could be, Holy Cow! It is—Miss Redbird at the cash register, Jeanette Gauda. Jeanette, born in a S-511, 112-pound, 19 yr. old freshman here, who happens to work in the snackbar.

A 1970 graduate of Sumner High, Jeanette has previously worked as a model for Silix and Famous-Barr. Now, you may ask, did she end up working in our snacketeria? The story began last year when Diane White, KSD-TV weather girl, helped Jeanette get a job at Busch Stadium as an usherette.

Through a misunderstanding over an autograph, she met rookie shortstop Matt Ramirez, whom she has been going with ever since. Company policy states that employees cannot date ballplayers, so this year Jeanette found herself out of a job.

"So I decided to enter the Miss Redbird Contest just for the heck of it. The other contestants looked like Miss Redbirds, so I was really surprised when I won," she explained.

"My duties began in March and they will continue until next March. Being Miss Redbird is a full-time job in the summer—attending ballgames and making personal appearances."

"As a representative of the Cardinals I attend civic and out of state affairs, serve as official hostess, and occasionally fill in for a ballplayer if he can't make it to a particular function.

Naturally Jeanette doesn't do all this without getting something in return.

"For winning the contest I received a wardrobe, and a year's supply of cosmetics by Georgeette. Thomas Pontiac provided me with a courtesy car—it's a Ventura II. I'm also paid modeling fees for my personal appearances."

Commenting on the effect of her experience, she said, "I've learned to carry myself better and to respect other people's feelings. For this one year I'm a public person and I feel great when I'm asked for an autograph.

"Being Miss Redbird hasn't changed me—half the time I don't think of myself as Miss Redbird except when I'm driving my car and it's written on the sides. Some of my friends stand back but I still pretty much hang around with the same kids I used to."

She explained how she happened to choose this campus. "Prof. Burns of the History Department called up the Cardinal office and someone told him I wanted to go to school. He talked to me and I told him I needed a job this semester. He helped me get this job as cashier and then through Project United, my fees were paid—all this happened on a Friday and I started school Monday."

Jeanette, taking 11 hours, is interested in Spanish, which should surprise no one.

When questioned about the future she replied, "I'd like to go into theater. This past summer I received letters from several theatrical academies. "Right now I'd like to get some basic college courses and then maybe take up some of those theatrical offers."

"I like working here—the people are so nice and friendly," she concluded, no doubt having grown accustomed to the swarms of photographers, reporters, and the merely curious who are part of a celebrity's life.

AOJ grant aims at "youth in trouble"

By RON TILLENHAUS
Current Staff Writer

The Administration of Justice program has received a $37,737 grant to continue the development of a training program for teachers, probation officers, judges, police, guidance counselors, personnel dealing with the mentally retarded and juvenile offenders of the law.

This grant is an extension of a $56,943 grant that developed the project last year. These grants are to be received from the Social and Rehabilitation Service of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

This one-year grant being administered by Eugene P. Schwartz (coordinator of the Administration of Justice program) will support the development of a curriculum for teaching an interdisciplinary group of agencies focusing on youth in trouble.

Schwartz explained that the curriculum will include programs to train personnel in such agencies as police departments, school systems, courts, and correctional institutions.

"The program will give priority to staffs working with inner city youths in trouble", he maintained.

"A guide for instructors will be developed and then demonstrated by a staff of volunteers from agencies in the juvenile system of justice."

The guide, according to Schwartz, will be a handbook for use by teachers intending to become instructors in programs dealing with mentally retarded offenders.

"This is the first time nationally that a curriculum is being developed to bridge the gap between working with mentally retarded and with youthful offenders of the law.

Schwartz further contended that the Administration of Justice program is being developed as a char-

COUNCIL AIRS GRIPES

By ALLEN RODAKOWSKI

Current Staff Writer

A list of the major complaints among students on this campus was presented at Saturday’s meeting of the Central Curriculum Committee.

Reading the list, presented by the Grievance Committee, were: High prices charged in the bookstore; Theft of lunches; Lack of typing room for students with assignments to complete.

The usual time variations of classes are a major complaint. These, however, were not the only gripes expressed at the meeting.

Organizations who hold dances often find themselves losing money or just breaking even," according to Bill Ring, who maintained that the charge of 30¢ per person exacted when a building is occupied for an activity was exorbitant.

By a vote of 19 to 3, the council accepted a motion which favored reduction in that 20-cent rate, despite the opposition’s contention that this fee is necessary due to expenses for utilities and guards.

According to figures released by John B. Greenwell, co-chairman of the Curriculum Committee, funds totaling $113,117,583 will be requested from the state legislature for the 1972-73 year. The division of these funds would be as follows:

- $58,743,261 for the Columbia campus.
- $17,899,883 for the Kansas City campus.
- $12,575,478 for the Illinois campus.
- $11,925,485 for this campus.
- $19,061,793 for a university hospital.

What do students deserve?

Since the appearance of last week's editorial indicting the absence of some sort of headgear for omelet attendants, we have encountered a varied response from staff and students alike. While some were favorable, others advised retraction, either because the state health ordinance cited did not exist, or merely so as not to rock the boat. First, while there remains some ambiguity as to whether the ordinance belongs to the state or the county, there is no doubt as to its existence, regardless of its parentage. Whether the university is bound by its provisions is another matter—but if not, why not? Aren't the members of the campus community entitled to the same consideration as a customer at, say, McDonald's or Burger King, in which case a place could lose its existence, regardless of its parentage?

The operative phrase, in this case, is "student union." Students have paid and will continue for years to pay through the nose for these facilities, and they have every right to expect the same kind of treatment they would expect in any place which seeks their business. And if such treatment is not forthcoming, they have every right to raise bloody hell about it. Unless they make their displeasure felt, they can expect only more of the same. Trivial?

New epoch for UMSL?

The curtain rises on another UMSL semester—a semester which for black students may well be a new epoch. A new epoch grown out of old contradictions: urban university—suburban location; black history—white instructor; strong leaders—weak organizations. It is an epoch in which the antagonistic nature of these and other more important contradictions bring about an heightening in the delirium of black students. This is an epoch which shall make demands simultaneously upon black students and upon the administrative environment of this university. The capacity of each to meet these demands shall determine the intensity of the struggle to be waged throughout this coming epoch.

Little has been noted of the history of the black student movement on this campus. It has been largely one of frustrated attempts at communication—with the university, with the community, and finally with one another. Male chauvinism from within and white chauvinism from without have caused confusion and contamination within the ranks of the black organizations of the past. Particularly crippling has been the university's lack of interest in and hesitance to promote the elements required to insure the continued existence of black organizations. The special needs of black students in general have been sadly neglected; it is such negligence which has succeeded in breaking the fighting spirit of many.

A clear analysis of this past history can serve to move black students to a higher level in the arena of campus struggle. The particular nature of this new epoch provides the framework through which an ideological giant step forward can be taken. Black students must come to see campus problems as they relate to the many social and economic ills which presently plague the American people. Struggle around the case of Angela Davis, the Viet

“Down-home” spirit

Dear Editor,

Most everyone has spent at least (a few hours/some time) in one of the small, down-home towns for which the Midwest, and particularly the Orient region, is so well-known.

There is, with little variance, the center of attraction, Main Street—hub of the town, where all things of popular interest begin and usually end. All the other usual and necessary ingredients of the small towns are to be found on or very near Main Street—the General Store, where everything “you really need” can be obtained; the Barber Shop, last private domain of the men-folk; the Five-and-Dime, paradise to a country youngster with a quarter; a station or two, usually at opposite ends of Main Street; and the local gin mills, though said about them.

But these places alone are not nearly enough on themselves to bring about the magic and excitement that comes to mind when one re-lives the memory of a Saturday afternoon on Main Street. Whether it is the friendly, “Good morning,” ma’am, may I help you?” immediately following the tinking of the bells on the door of one of the shops; or the “Howdy-do?” of the town’s folk passing on the sidewalk, the one thing that makes a dinky little old one-horse town truly exciting is the open friendship of the people and their honest desire to be one with everyone they meet on the street. And it’s not necessary for long-lost friends or the preacher’s wife, either; these people are pleasantly friendly with virtually everyone they see on the street, even that strange, big-city dude, YOU.

Now you may remember how really GOOD it felt to be recognized as an actual human being—nothing so very special, mind you, just another smiling face on the street. Only THE most important thing around.

This is not just a little elementary “What I did this summer…” essay. It is a bid to everyone who walks this UMSL campus to “the most important thing around” to our fine new buildings and the natural beauty of our campus—smile, say “HI” to someone you don’t know, and try to think “Down Home.” Do it just once, and see if you don’t feel better.

Rifle range

Dear Editor,

This is to inform the student body that the Rifle Club is still trying to overcome the Athletic Department of the desirability of having an on-campus rifle range. However, the subject hasn’t drawn much response in the past five months from the Athletic Department in spite of constant inquiries by interested students.

I am afraid that the department will suddenly announce that “We have decided on the allocation of monies for the next year and—yes—we didn’t remember to include the rifle range. See us next year.”

I think that a show of support for the rifle range by the many students who enjoy handling fire-arms would be very helpful to the Athletic Department in making a more accurate decision. In order to do this, the Rifle Club is asking for signatures on a petition to be presented to the department.

Please consider the bargain price at which this range is being offered. Also consider the convenience, fun, safety training and recreation offered by this range—and then sign the petition when asked.

New epoch for UMSL?

Nam War, the murder of George Jackson, and the government’s recent economic attack upon the working people of this nation are issues which give life to campus organizations which are otherwise in danger of becoming social clubs and, finally, fading away.

This new epoch demands that the fighting spirit of black students be revived. Ideological reconstruction becomes a major task in eliciting a response from the university administration which, as an outgrowth of the law-making body of this government, must share the responsibility for correcting its errors.

The ability of black students to respond to the demands of this new epoch may determine the future direction of the black student movement on this campus.

Excerpts from SEMESTER'S FINALE

"... Questions number five (40 - points credit). Explain the significance of the young man's jump into the pond and subsequent wading out. Be sure to give specific examples to justify your interpretation."

Obvious: This act was suicidal. A protest against the futility of life. No protest against the futility of war (a timely subject), and also to complicate the point, the man was on a subconscious trip! No, it was a Freudian slip. Symbolizing a return to the womb--it is definitely a sensuous event with sexual overtones. The man's an exhibitionist. Acting out the wishes of his id: This pond serves as a Phallic symbol of sublimation, and he is homosexual, and very virile. No - wait! It's masturbation, or castration (it can be both). Which follows the universal theme of sublimation, and loss of potency, so Very essential for the comprehension Of this piece. (But that's not enough!)

There must be more significance! I know! It is a case of allegorical inconsequentiality. Right on -- allegory (good word).

This man has an Oedipus complex. Or possibly he is Adam, re-living the Fall of Man. (But he's alone!) Then he must be a Christ-figure in the eternal scapegoat. Or Cain, or the Wandering Jew. Or if that doesn't fit, he must be Satan.

In the scene of Temptation, For which the water Symbolizes sin. (I can't be sure which one it is, I'll scratch it out, and hurry on to "social" satire!)

Yes! Social, economic, political, religious satire is present in this act. This man is a martyr For pollution, Or he's rejecting all the materialistic world, which is represented in the symbol of the West. He's rejecting the West, the Judeo-Christian heritage (that sounds too definite - you'll never get away with it!)

But, at least he's rejecting Middle-class culture! (But is this action good? I haven't answered that.) The author means to say, This action is OK. Because it represents his rebellion against his traditionalism, his manhood initiation rite, of sacrificing himself to the "great brown river god" of life.

This is the beginning of the Age of Aquarius, and the pond is the Terrible Unknown, into which he ventures... alone. Or else it is a sea of Time, and his deed symbolizes A successful trial by water. And in this sense Defines the artist himself, Transcending To a higher plane of existence. (This is too far out--I have to get back on the track) It's really a searching For identity, An existential leap of faith, Conversion, revelation, inspiration. This jump into the water Is in reality the symbol of rejuvenation and regeneration, in the cyclic tradition Of fertility rites. This act is representing A defense of Nature, By uniting with the pond water. He is becoming one with Creation, Expressing an eternal Idea of WATER, in defiance of death, and thus this important step is one to immortality, because he is metaphorically Being linked to all mankind. This weighty matter is in actuality, A celebration of the self, A purification - That is, the purging of Guilt feelings; and creation of a New and Better Life-style through the forms of self-expression. (But what if this is wrong? I have to be ambiguous, For maybe this act is Not so good - Maybe it's indifferent: A conflict in which The author is taking sides.) The water is intuition, Which the man jumps into in a state of reason (or is it backwards?)

The pond is just the Physical, the man is Spiritual (or does it matter?)

Perhaps the author just intends To say this is a Premonition - the Foreshadowing of an even greater one, Which seems to put this scene Of pond immersion into a perspective of the pessimistic View (this is a strain)

And as such, the man is trying to escape from Reality; a nihilistic statement Of hopelessness which culminates so spectacularly in the death-wish, Or in other words, he's rejecting himself, and thus the centrality of the theme of isolation becomes apparent, Because this act of Jumping into the pond illustrates The futility of all communications With the land, which is mankind.

Woodrow Wilson fellowship competition suspended due to lack of funds

This fall, for the first time in more than twenty years, there will be no Woodrow Wilson Fellowship competition.

Among college professors, and those college seniors who are thinking of becoming professors, this annual competition has become as much a part of the fall term as football.

In announcing that the fellowship program would be temporarily suspended, H. Ronald House, National Director of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation, said, "Funds currently available to the Foundation for first-year graduate fellowships are being used to support over 250 Fellows during the 1971-72 academic year. Prospects for securing new funds are uncertain."

"During the coming year, trustees and officers of the Foundation in cooperation with representatives of the academic world, will design a new fellowship program taking into account recent developments in academic education and the teaching profession, and seek funds for this new program.

A total of 211 Woodrow Wilson Fellows will be supported this year at 49 graduate schools. Fellowships are being held in reserve for 35 others who have had to postpone graduate study because of military or alternative service.

Other foundation programs will be continued during 1971-72 and 1972-73. These include the Dissertation Fellowships, the Martin Luther King Jr. Fellowships and the Graduate Information and Counseling Service for Black Veterans, the Teaching and Administrative Internships, and the National Humanities Series.

But it is academic programs, the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation receives grants from other foundations and contributions from individuals, including over 2,000 former Woodrow Wilson Fellows.

The Wilson Fellowships are only one of a number of programs throughout the country which have suffered from the recent decline in fellowship support, House said. The U. S. government, which in 1967 supported nearly 11,000 fellowships for beginning graduate students, has reduced or eliminated several programs. It will provide only about 6,000 new fellowships for 1972-73.

At the same time many state governments have similarly reduced the amount of support they provide, and a number of programs financed by corporations and private foundations have been discontinued.

As a result of rapid growth of graduate schools, more Ph. D.'s have been produced this year than can be placed, House said. The recession and the recent wave of anti-academic sentiment across the country have combined to reduce drastically the amount of money available for college faculty salaries.

As a result of these two factors, the demand for college teachers has dropped just at the time when the supply is increasing.

While the country may have overreacted in the college teacher shortage of a decade ago, there is now the danger that it will similarly overreact to the current problems of higher education by discouraging outstanding students from considering academic careers.

"Today's undergraduates who are considering academic careers must look to the job market of 1980. By that time the present economic and political climate will be history."

However, young people planning for academic careers should make flexible plans, House advised. It is unlikely that they can expect to step into the fellowship escalator and be carried smoothly up through the Ph.D. and into an academic post.

Many may wish to secure certification for secondary school teaching to provide an alternative, either temporary or permanent, to doctoral work. The M.A. is still the accepted preparation for teaching in most junior and community colleges, and students headed for graduate school should consider careers in this rapidly expanding sector.

The new Doctor of Arts degree, now being offered at a number of universities, provides another alternative to the traditional Ph.D.

"The officers and trustees of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation are concerned that there is no, and never will be, an oversupply of truly outstanding teachers, combining dedication to scholarship with a sensitivity to people and their needs," House concluded.

"They are determined to find some means of continuing to identify, encourage and assist young people with these qualities in preparing for careers appropriate to their talents and society's needs."

Noontime odyssey - UMSL

By J. Shaw

At twelve noon every day my stomach begins to rumble. If I eat it in the morning it usually wails until about one o'clock, but when I wake up I find it more gratifying to remain in bed thus to fix breakfast.

That is not to say however, that I do not set my alarm to ring in time for breakfast. The night before I find it so difficult task of thinking of making myself something to eat in the morning, and thus set my alarm as so as not to have time to do so.

But every morning when the alarm shakes my dream I awaken and peer at the hand of the clock. In my head I start figuring. "three minutes to dress, fifteen to get to school, four to get to class, ah, I could sleep another half hour."

And it is always the best half hour of sleep of the night. One half hour later I'm up, dressed, off to school and in class, in twenty-five minutes.

Getting back to twelve noon, when my stomach begins to rumble, I find the need to eat. Being no lazy nor usually not having the time to leave the campus, I should have a reasonable excuse to go get something to eat, I decide to go to the Administration building.

By the way, the vending machines have been replaced by robot chefs preparing sandwiches upon a stainless steel.

On my way there I pass a friend, who by turns puts me about the same place to eat on campus, or on grounds depending on your perspective.

"It's called a Snacketeria," he says.

"A snack-what?" I reply.

"Snacketeria, they have ham-burgers, french fries, cakes, salad, pies, and other hot fixings."

My first impulse is to laugh, but seeing it is not a joke I decide not to. Being urged by my stomach to eat we trot over to the Snacketeria.

Once upstairs, right at the top step, I find the first foundation of my starvation. There is a group of people, a rather large group of people, standing in line which leads to the entrance of the food portion of the Snacketeria.

"A line?" I inquire.

"You're at the end of it," comes a reply from the person in front of me, obviously happy not to be at the end anymore. The line moves slowly and by the time the groups from my abdomen are within five minutes apart, a bad sign, we reach the tray-and-silverware stand, or rather the stand where the trays and silverware usually are, when none is eating. Nothing a tray on the floor/ or the other side of the rotting out bars, again depending on your perspective. I reach under and grab it. Stuffed with my tray I lean on a nearby tray and get back up and head for the water.

"Ah, the soda pump," I think, as I go up and get a cup. I drink the soda, the tray and silverware and notice before I've done anything else that I have water ice in it. Very cool. I take to myself, "pan of ice water, a fountain though would be better." I drink my ice water, leaving the ice and decide to get some Coke. I put my cup under the sign marked "Coke" and push the lever in back.

Immediately there comes over my left shoulder a cup filled with an arm. The arm places his cup under the "Pepsi" sign, scowls, and moves to the pop. Another arm and cup come over my right shoulder headed for the Seven-Up. Still another pair come from under my arm aiming for the Dr. Pepper. Everyone still being thirsty, they are all gone. Meanwhile a man to my left comes up and asks, "What'll you have?"

"Salisbury steak with mushroom sauce," he answers.

He gives me a cheeseburger and I turn away looking for something to complement the hot food. A group of several "excess" men's and "excess" women's table is no excuse. A group of several "excess" men's and "excess" women's table is no excuse. He makes my way to the french fries section. Immediately before me is placed what appears to be five fifths of a potato.

"French fries?" I ask.

"French fries," comes the reply.

Looking for the condiment stand, I take one of my french fries. Again, "French fries?" I question.

"Brrr," comes the reply, this time from my stomach. I'm on my way to the french fries section. Immediately before me is placed what appears to be five fifths of a potato.

Now, where did I put my hand in the rest of my body? I have to combine four cups of pop and fix my body. I'm not waiting for my turn and I feel as though my cup should say "excess" cup. To the rest, but cups aren't very polite.

After finally seating my Coke I wait over to a group of people crowding around a huge pile of what looks like silverware and gold.

"What's that?" I ask.

"Aluminum foil," comes a reply.

"Oh, what's inside?"

"The gold are cheeseburgers and the silver are hamburgers."

I make my decision. I close my eyes, open them wide and try to imagine the taste of each. I respect, obviously a little exercise. By the time I re-open my eyes, only one second has passed, they are all gone. Meanwhile a man to my left comes up and asks, "What'll you have?"

"French fries?" I ask.

"French fries," comes the reply.

Looking for the condiment stand, I take one of my french fries. Again, "French fries?" I question.

"Brrr," comes the reply, this time from my stomach. Now I'm on my way to the french fries section. Immediately before me is placed five fifths of a potato.

Testing dates

College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Certification Test. Two of the four different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service a non-profit educational organization which prepares and administers this testing program.

New dates for the testing of prospective teachers are November 13, January 28, April 8 and July 15.
New faculty members for school of education

The senior research psychologist from Stanford University's Research Institute, an award-winning conservator and newspaper columnist, and the former assistant project director for the Educational Renaissance in Appalachia (ERA), are among the eight new faculty members appointed to the School of Education this year.

The appointees are Dr. William Ray Rhine, associate professor and Dr. D. Miller, Dr. Charles Farzaro, Dr. Rosanne Gainer, Dr. Robert Parkard, Dr. Joseph Kuzmiak, Dr. Dennis P. Fisch, and Dr. Robert James Tolzama, all assistant professors.

Dr. Rhine comes to UMSL from the Urban and Social Systems Division of the Stanford Research Institute, where he was the senior research psychologist for the past three years.

A specialist in the development of disadvantaged pupils, Rhine was formerly associated with the American Institute for Research in Palo Alto, California, where he was principal investigator for the evaluation of school mental health research projects funded through the U.S. Office of Education.

While at the University of Texas, first as a Ph.D. candidate and later as assistant professor of educational psychology, he held positions as a counseling psychologist in the university's testing center and as the field assignment officer for a Peace Corps training program at Southwest Texas State College. He also served as a psychological consultant for Goodwill Industries as well as a counselor for the physically handicapped and for outpatients from a local mental hospital.

Rhine holds B.A. and M.A. degrees in history from Southern Illinois University, an M.S. in clinical psychology from SIU, and a Ph.D. degree in developmental-clinical psychology from the University of Texas. His articles have been published in numerous child development, psychology, and science journals. Rhine will join the Department of Behavioral Studies and Research at UMSL.

Dr. Miller, who will join the Elementary Education department, is a former book editor for the Library of Congress, a newspaper columnist, a qualified librarian, a member of the National Association of School Librarians, and a critic of the National Library of Medicine. Miller will join the Department of Education Services.

Dr. Parkard is a curriculum director, specializing in the development of educational programs for the University of Miami and a Ph.D. degree in development of educational programs for the University of South Carolina.

Dr. Parkard is a curriculum design specialist who developed a computer-based collection and reporting system. He is also a former director of the Midwest Regional Educational Laboratory in Minnesota. Parkard also produced programs for the computer and media, which included the addition of new positions to the Department of Behavioral Studies and Research.

The author of numerous articles on behavioral engineering and computer science, he is also a student of St. Paul Seminary in Minnesota and a Ph.D. student of educational psychology at the University of Minnesota. At UMSL, he will join the Department of Behavioral Studies and Research.

Dr. Tolzama will be visiting assistant professor of counseling and guidance, specializing in aiding parents in understanding their children's motivation and behavior. He comes to UMSL from Western Michigan University where he was a research assistant in the Department of Education, and a Ph.D. student for the University of Washington, and a former assistant professor of counseling and guidance at the University of Michigan.

Tolzama comes to UMSL from Iowa State University, where he holds a B.A. degree in educational psychology and a Ph.D. degree in educational psychology and the philosophy of education.

Dr. Gainer holds a B.A. degree in educational counseling and a Ph.D. degree in educational psychology from the University of Iowa. He will join the Department of Behavioral Studies and Research.

Linda Rich was the featured performer at a folk music concert. It was sponsored by the Inter-varsity Christian Fellowship.

Harriers lead off '71 slate

The Rivermen cross country team gets their 1971 season off and running tomorrow when they play host to the harriers from Westminster College from Fulton, Mo. Leading the pack for the Rivermen will be four of last year's lettermen: Frank Neal, Casey Ben- cembrick, Joe Tut hill, and Jerry Moser. Also returning to the squad is Marvin Goodwin, who sat out much of last year after undergoing surgery. In addition, Ted McQueney will be rejoining the squad after playing soldier for two years with the National Guard. Bolstering the squad will be a whole flock of fledgling freshmen. Among them are a pair of runners from Webster Groves High School, Tom Knaap and Ed Herder. This dynamic duo is joined by Mike Bousch from Parkway Central, Tom Dierker of Cleveland High, and Greg Roy, from Duluth.

The contest tomorrow marks the UMSL coaching debut of Dan Wall, one of the newcomers to the athletic staff. Wall inherits the reins from Larry Berres, who remains as golf coach and chief scout. Wall looks forward to a better year than last year, when the Rivermen posted a less-than-spectacular 1-10 season. "We've had good teams in the past," said Wall, "but we've got a lot of runners returning, plus a good group of freshmen. I'm sure we'll be tough again."

Midwest Tourney Monday

Monday, Sept. 28, the UMSL Golf Team, in association with Terre du Lac, is sponsoring the first annual Midwest Intercollegiate Golf Classic at the Terre du Lac Club near Bonne Terre, Missouri. The classic is to be an 18 hole affair, beginning with a shotgun start at 9 a.m. 21 teams, representing five conferences, are scheduled to take part.

Conferences which will be represented include Missouri Valley, Big 8, Big 10, Ohio Valley and Midwest.

Terre du Lac is located some 60 miles southwest of St. Louis. For information regarding the tournament, contact the athletic department, 453-3641.
Soccer team prepares for Benedictine after tough loss to Billikens

the Ravens will no doubt bring something like half the population of Kansas with them to cheer them on. Tim Tollefson remarked after last year's battle with the Ravens that all he could hear while he was in the nets was "Kill the goalie," and he was the goalie that was in his estimation.

They must have a bunch of people at that school that were born in or escaped from St. Louis because Dallas said, it's like old home week for them. "They have big parties and everything every time they come down here."

They give no parties for the Rivermen, however. Last year they beat our boys 3-1. Dallas plans to work on the Rivermen offense in preparation for the game. Getting on the boards is his biggest concern. "Our defense is strong," he said.

"Also, we'll have to try to stay away from key injuries. We have a real tough schedule, but that's the way we like it."

This came when the scores were added up, and the handicap subtracted. It was a tremendous feeling to watch the automatic handicap screen about a third of the course from my card. Just goes to prove you can't believe everything you read.

The Open has been growing every year, and for some very sound reasons. For one thing, the tourney is an enjoyable occasion, abounding in good fellowship and, very important, cheap golf. 18 holes for one skin is welcome any time.

It is also a fine educational experience for any inexperienced golfer, a fine opportunity to watch fine golfers on one side and, to keep some semblance of self-respect, other theo's chewing up the fairways of another hole.

The Open has everything.

Rivermen kickers in Bill battle royal

By DARRELL SHOULTS
Associate Sports Editor

The Billikens poured onto the field cocky and confident. They were the royalty in the world of college soccer. They were beginning the defense of their second consecutive NCAA title. They had a string of 29 victories. They were looking forward to a rout of the upstarts from across town.

The Rivermen took the field in a different frame of mind. They were like the underdog Goliath. They were coming from a just-above-.500 season, and had as yet to make an appearance in an NCAA playoff (they were beginning their second year of affiliation with that organization.)

The Billikens were looking for a battle royal. Many of them had friends on the Billiken team. They were schoolmates, and at least one of them, goalie Tim O'Toole, was a former Bill. The Bills, on the other hand, were thinking in terms of blowing UMSL's squad right out of Mussil Field.

As it turned out, the Billikens were fooled. Sure they won 2-1. Seems like they always do. But the drama wasn't played according to their script. Indeed, before five minutes were up, the big, bad Billikens found themselves trailing a fired-up Rivermen team 1-0.

Try as they might, the Bills couldn't overcome that deficit in the first two periods. It was in the third period that they really surged to life. In that period, they outshot the Rivermen 13-2, and at 13.52, they tied the game. Billiken sophomore Don Cowie and one past goalie O'Toole, taking a feed from Jim Dradue.

In the fourth period, the Bills broke the tie when an UMSL defender deflected a corner kick to Mike Seery. The Billiken pulled off a cute over-the-shoulder number to put St. Louis ahead to stay.

The Bills played a tough game, and some of the fans were talking in terms of physical intimidation. That idea didn't sit well with Rivermen coach Don Dallas.

"I don't think there was any intimidation," he said. "The Bills played a hard-nosed game. They have talent and are strong physically. Intimidation? I don't think so."

What happened, explained Dallas, is that SLU just wore out the Rivermen. "They have 18 good ballplayers, and they kept shutting them in and out. They finally wore our guys down."

Dallas was particularly pleased with the performance of one new Riverman. That would be Steve Buckley, a transfer student from Florissant Valley Community College. Buckley played the center halfback position, and, according to Dallas, looked very good.

The coach also had good words for the Rivermen defense. "Our whole backfield played well," he said. "Kramer and Hudson (Greg and Ken) played an exceptional game. Kramer injured himself in the game, and it was feared that he might have suffered a shoulder separation. Preliminary examinations showed no sign of a separation, but it is doubtful that the senior defenseman will see action in next Saturday's game with Benedictine College, formerly known as St. Benedict's."
