Late Fall cited as

garage completion date

Carl Hess

UMSL students returning to campus this Fall were greeted by many familiar scenes: building hallways and walkways—the busy Cafeteria and Bookstore—and traffic congestion and parking problems. And still the problem continues, the doubt. That huge five-level parking garage originally scheduled to be completed last May probably won’t be done till late fall. John Perry, UMSL Business Officer, cited a Construction Workers’ strike and weather as reasons for the long delay. “Although it has been dry here lately, the spring wetness kept them from pouring concrete footings and lower level,” he said. All work was halted during the lengthy labor dispute in the Spring, but the more recent Sheetmetal Workers’ strike does not affect the garage project. At present, workmen are installing concrete flooring for the structure, using a different method than that used on previous garages. In these cases, pre-fabricated slabs were trucked in and lifted into place by crane. This time the slabs are being poured in-place in an attempt to prevent problems with floor joints which had cropped up on the other three garages.

Even the lengthy delays and rising wages and steel prices will not affect the $1.2 million dollar cost for the garage, however. Perry said that the contract awarded to McCarthy Brothers Construction Company was done by “firm commitment bidding.” This means that increased costs of material and labor must be absorbed by the contractor, and cost overruns will not be paid for by the University.

Completion date for the 825-space structure had been projected for late last May, but now the most optimistic prediction is mid-October. “I think probably will be done until late fall,” Perry said.

The huge mountain of dirt which had accumulated because of the construction will eventually be moved. Perry stated that the dirt will be used to fill a ditch behind the garage, where the new General Services Building will be located.

Because of the on-campus parking crunch, the auxiliary parking lot on Evans Lane behind E.J. Korvette must again be used. Shuttle service will extend to the auxiliary parking lot, and parking permits are required for use of the lot, and Campus Police will ticket vehicles which do not display valid stickers.

Universities challenge UMSL’s academic plan

Filene Cohen

Higher education in the St. Louis area, especially concerning graduate and doctoral programs, has emerged as a cloudy and controversial issue in the past few months.

UMSL, the area’s representative public university, has been confronted by St. Louis University and Washington University on the question of UMSL’s projected growth in the masters and Ph.D. programs.

University of Missouri president, C. Brice Ratchford, and the end of the university’s growth body which oversees the undertakings of the five campuses university, have been working actively on an academic plan that will direct the campuses for the next ten years.

The academic plan has been primarily concerned with the development of the individual campus and avoiding the duplication of programs within the university system.

“The people of Missouri cannot expect to find on every campus the full range of programs,” the academic plan states.

However, UMSL is now being called upon to reexamine its expansion in light of the already existing programs at St. Louis University and Washington University.

Under the academic plan released August 2 by the Board of Curators in almost complete form, UMSL was slated for expansion beyond the undergraduate level of study. Biology, chemistry, physics, biology, mathematics, psychology, political science, public administration, management, and administration of justice; A backaches and masters degree program in psychology for development. Plans for a bachelor’s degree program in nursing were dropped, due to financial reasons.

Presidents William Danforth of Washington University and Father Paul Reineinert of St. Louis University had, during the past 30 months of planning for the University of Missouri, been watching UMSL’s growth in the area of graduate and doctoral programs with concern.

They pointed to the duplication of funds and the inefficient use of facilities, especially in light of a study contracted by the Missouri Higher Education Council in 1972, which demonstrated that the private universities could accommodate 300 more doctoral students in UMSL was pursuing. Concerning UMSL’s growth had been contacted by way of correspondence between the two presidents and University of Missouri President Ratchford.

Wednesday, September 11, is the deadline for applications from students wishing to take the Law SAT Examination this fall. The examination is a prerequisite for consideration for admission to any American law school, and all students should complete and mail those applications before that date.

Dr. Harry G. Mellman, prelaw advisor, says that necessary instructions and forms are available in Room 598 Lucas Hall. Mellman should be contacted for an appointment "where unusual situations exist." Mellman notes that Patrick Kelly, dean of the law school at the University of Missouri - Kansas City, will be on the UMSL campus Tuesday, September 10, to visit with students interested in entering law schools, especially those eligible to enter the Fall of 1975.

"UMKC is," Mellman says, "along with its usual style of training, excellent - lawyers, known throughout the country at one of the handful of law schools which has managed great achievements in the training of minorities toward law careers, including blacks - and Dean Patrick will provide details on this most unique program."

Informal sessions have been scheduled for the J.C. Penney Building Office of Admissions between 3:30 to 5 pm and from 6:30 to 8 pm on September 6. The long sessions have been arranged especially for students.

The sessions are informal and there will be no required paperwork. Coffee will be available.

Mellman stated, "that in the past two years, no less than 60 UMSL graduates have been admitted to Law Schools throughout the country as well as to the four in Missouri. Among those outside Missouri law schools are, to name a few, Harvard, Georgetown, New York University, Michigan, Indiana, Stanford, and a number of others." The Office of Admissions for the LSAT is maintained on a 24-hour-per-day, 7-day-a-week basis, 52 weeks a year. While students need not be concerned about most admission problems before their junior year at UMSL, all students are invited by Dr. Mellman to contact him about their possible futures.

Mellman’s paper should contact him. He will also provide details on this most unique program.

Monday Colloquia series

The following Monday Colloquia have been scheduled for the Fall semester:

September 9 - Harry Mellman, Political Science/Administration of Justice "Social Scientists on the Brink of - Major Breakthrough? Political Implications?" or "Limb?"

September 16 - Paul Gomberg, Philosophy "I.Q. and Race: A Discussion of Some Confusions" (Those wishing advance copies of Dr. Gomberg's paper should contact him. He will also distribute copies to various departments around the campus.)

September 30 - Emilio Pagoulatos, Economics/International Studies "The International Transmission of Inflation"

October 21 - Hugh Nourse, Economics "The Impact of FHA Insurance Practices on Urban Housing Markets in Transition"

November 28 - Peter Grandstaff, Economics and R. E. Markland, Business "A Stimulation Model of the St. Louis SMSA Economy"

November 4 - Eugene Meehan, Political Science/Metropolitan Studies "The Record of Public Housing in St. Louis"

December 2 - Elizabeth Clavion, Economics/International Studies "Alternative Property Rights Systems and the Grant of Power"

All sessions will run from 3:30-5:00 pm in Room 331 SSBE. Students as well as faculty are encouraged to attend. Refreshments will be served.

Peer Counseling

The Peer Counseling will be open Monday through Thursday during the Fall Semester. Evening hours are Monday through Thursday from 4:30 to 6:30 pm.

The Peer Counseling is located in room 213C Administration Building.

Jordan named dean of graduate school

Thomas E. Jordan, professor of behavioral studies and research, has been appointed dean of the UMSL Graduate School. He was named recently by Interim Chancellor Emeritus C. Turner. The appointment is effective Sept. 1.

Jordan, who joined the UMSL faculty in 1968, succeeds Robert S. Salvidor who resigned Sept. 1, 1973, to become executive vice president of the University of Toledo. Everett Walters, dean of faculty serving as acting dean of the Graduate School during his tenure, said that Jordan would make a superb graduate dean through his long teaching experience, through his service as chairman of the University Senate and through his research and writing. Dr. Jordan is well known and highly respected on campus. He is also well known nationally for his significant research and writing in the field of child development and he has received a number of substantial grants to support this research. His appointments come about the time that graduate programs have received high praise from outside evaluation teams as part of the academic reevaluation of the entire University. "I know that our graduate programs will carry on and expand on this fine tradition," the chancellor said.

More than 1,000 students are enrolled in the UMSL Graduate School, which administers master's degree programs in 10 areas in arts and sciences, business, education, engineering and providing leadership for the University of Missouri-St. Louis. The department also has established a year ago to provide substantial grants to support this reevaluation. Included in that total was a $302,344 grant received in 1971, the largest ever received by an individual and committees.

Plan should increase banks' student loans

State treasurer, John Spainhower, has initiated a plan that would encourage Missouri banks to make loans to students.

Through the plan, the state would guarantee 100 percent of a student's loan. Banks would make more money available to banks for loans with the stipulation that it be loaned to students.

Benefit of Financial Aid, Bart Devoli, says, "Students in need of long term financial aid should consider a federally insured student loan and check with their local banks to see if they are participating in this program."

Veterans awarded sizable grant

UMSL, has been granted $43,800 by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in support of a continued service to military veterans enrolled at UMSL.

Veterans place new rep on UMSL campus

Tom Pagano

Brian Ryan, formerly veterans aid officer at Meramec Community College, has been named Veterans Administration representative at UMSL. Ryan accepted this position August 14, 1973. Ryan has been assigned to UMSL under the VA's "Vet-Rep" program, which assigns a full-time representative to each college or university campus with 500 or more military veterans. There are an estimated 1,800 veterans enrolled at the UMSL campus this fall semester.

Ryan will work closely with the UMSL Office of Veterans Affairs, established last year to aid veterans in adjusting to the university environment, and to offer tutoring services: Also covered in Ryan's responsibilities are assisting Veterans in so far as pay problems, benefit counseling, as well as "any individual problems encountered by Veterans attending UMSL."

Ryan received a bachelor's degree from St. Benedict's College in 1965, and currently is pursuing his Master's degree in Business Administration at St. Louis University. He served two years in the Army, including one year in Vietnam.

For more information, Veterans may contact Ryan at 853-5315.

Donham 'very pleased' with orientation days

Paul April and Lucy Zepf

Dennis Donham, the new Assistant Dean of Students, was very pleased with his first encounter with new students. It was only his first day on the job, but in general I was very pleased with the program. Orientation, which took place on August 26 and 27, was an introduction to campus for the many students who attended. The day's activities began at 8:30 am with speeches by Interim Chancellor Emory Turner and Dean of Student Affairs Conney Kimble. General Counsel then presented a slide show about UMSL.

Unlike previous orientations there were five morning sessions. The first session involved upperclassmen sharing their experiences of UMSL with the new students.

The only especially successful program was the Faculty Information Exchange. This session gave the new students a chance to meet and talk informally with various faculty members. The final morning session presented a picture of the administrative structure of the university and the functions of University Senate and Central Council. The remainder of the first day consisted of various panel discussions. A picnic and concert by the Black Jake were the final events of the day.

Dean Donham feels that the orientation program at the commuter student wants this type of help. Although this was above average, however, with little participation by black, veterans or older students. "Or- igination," Donham said, "is viewed as a very traditional institution, that these groups sometimes frown on." He also believed a problem was that too many of the students had to work. In the future, he would like to work on reaching these groups.

Student Affairs will be sending out questionnaires to students who attended orientation. With the ability to obtain feedback and spend more time and experimentation on future orientation, Dean Donham believes that "by the end of UMSL, should have a very stable class, and that program that hopeful- ly will reach all new students." This will prevent the exclusion of some students "who always remain discontented."

UMSL interim chancellor Emory Turner, however, responded to a copy of correspondence he had received through the Office of Public Information. His letter reached the Post-Dispatch during the summer months, and the disconcert of the private universities received more public attention.

Brenda Williams, hostess of KSD-radio's talk show, "Pulse St. Louis," picked up on the issue of higher education in St. Louis, and invited Turner, Lattie Coor, vice chancellor of Washington University, and Merrimot Cuninggim, advisor on program management for the Ford Foundation, to discuss it. The program was aired last Sunday evening.

One of the more basic differences between public and private graduate programs is cost. According to Turner, UMSL is in the midst of the "most "cost-efficient" institutions nationally. He maintained that tuition had been raised only modestly in the last few years. (Just recently, tuition was increased by $20.)

Coor, in discussing the substantially higher tuition that students of private institutions must pay, felt that there should be a sharing of the burden "so that it would not fall disproportionately on the students and their parents." This philosophy is reflected in the two proposals presented by the presidents of the private universities for utilizing the already-existing graduate programs. One was a fellowship program where the student would receive full scholarship and a stipend of $1000, and he would be able to attend the Missouri school — state or private — that offered his program. The fellowships would be monitored by the new Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education. The other was a contact system in which the board "would pay the private institution's costs based on the per-credit-hour amount as calculated to apply at the University of Missouri, and the student would pay his tuition to the board and attend the private university with his program." The Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education, according to Coor, had created a relatively new body, assigned the function of examining the direction of both public and private institutions in the state. Where it once served in only an advisory capacity, it is now given the authority to approve and terminate programs. According to Turner, the academic plan approved for the University of Missouri by the Board of Curators is "just a license, and not a mandate" for new programs. Each program at UMSL will have to be proposed individually and will be subject to approval by the Board of Curators.

In discussing UMSL's growth, Coor stressed that, although UMSL serves certain communities needs, "If the alumni cannot, there should be cooperation in "collectively assuring" the public and private universities. He felt the best way to reach this goal was to work cooperatively with the existing institutions. Turner, in favor of cooperation, said he felt it was imperative for programs, and the cost of alternative pro-

Campus feels adverse affects of inflation

The decision of the University of Missouri’s Board of Curators to increase the cost of parking ($2.40 from the last year’s $2.00) was necessary to minimize the impact from the university’s general budget and the higher Governor’s budget reductions and lower by one-half the effects of inflation. The University of Missouri has kept to its original surplus of $60 million due to the decisions of last year. This eases the overflow, but is spur-of-the-moment and crusading new paper editor, writes his learned from editor Kane, such a tile of last year. This eases the overflow, but is timeless?

"Book re-sale: another horror story"

Dear Editor:
In regard to Walt Jaschek's story in your summer issue, I was shocked to hear of the thoughts of making student activity fees voluntary.

I have been on this campus as a full-time student for two years, have paid my fees gladly—because I have gotten much in return. Programs, activities, availability of equipment...all these things would be lost along with the loss of the fees. Democracy can only go so far.

The conclusion and increase in needless manpower that would result from a voluntary system would be entirely ridiculous. They should remain mandatory.

According to the story, the idea is in a primitive stage. It should stay there!

"Refuse to populate 'UMSL benches"

Dear Editor:
From new to the UMSL campus, but not to the University of Missouri-Columbia campus for a year under my residence hall, dragged me to stay in town for a semester. The benches are described as a commuter campus, and it is their responsibility to deal with the always-important parking problem.

In Columbia, I was used to huddling pleasantly on a comfortable wooden bench with friends under shade trees. Here, I find only a few miserable concrete benches that I refuse to populate.

I’m not the type that likes to lay on the ground. I tend to soak up moisture. Do the folks around here have something against us? Or softness?

If this is the case, I’d suggest we should not be excluded. We not only have to do the best we can to help the students, but we should help them. They should want to thank everyone concerned.

Prepared criteria speaks louder than search committee's words

Members of the chancellor search committee, though quiet, are not silent, are letting their criteria sheet do most of their talking. (See criteria sheet, right.)

Their personal preferences they had in choosing a new chancellor, most committee members said the criteria sheet was their spokeswoman. If they did voice an opinion it was, in general, a rewording of the criteria sheet. All nine members worked on the criteria.

The committee, which was formed shortly after the resignation of Chancellor Joseph Hartley on March 7, 1974, consists of four academic, four nonacademic members who represent the College of Arts and Sciences, the Schools of Business and Education and Business, two members of the UMSL administration and the president. It is the third committee of its type in Missouri Higher Education.

The committee's job is to choose five to nine suitable candidates who will be recommended to the President C. Brice Ratchford. Committee chairman, History professor J. Neal Primm, said it was likely the number would be five and that it would be nine. Then, Ratchford will pick the chancellor.

In order to attract candidates, the committee published a full-page ad in the Feb. 3, 1974 issue of the Missouri Journal of Higher Education and the Feb. 18 issue of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. The committee's advertisement stressed that there was no political party affiliation and that there were over 300 applications by the Jan. 5, 1974 deadline.

In the past four months, the committee has been given personal interviews by 26 candidates. They were given personal dossiers which are being evaluated for the full chancellor position.

"So this is the Current's 200th issue. Big deal. Isn't it bad enough that student funds are wasted on this rag—which never is read anyway—without dredging up its history?

It hasn't even consistently been called the Current. The name has changed as often as a boy's vocal chords in puberty—but still can't compete with the chancellor's office.

When the University of Missouri-Normandy Residence Center opened Sept. 16, 1960, Jackie Conrad, editor of the Tiger Cub sent a reporter to cover the story.

With five front page stories on the new campus, the Tiger Cub's first issue came out on Nov. 23, 1960. Every month for the next three years the Tiger Cub was the journalistic masterpiece of MUNRC. To finance the publication, the staff held car washes, sold Boosters, and sold subscriptions for $1.75.

Its four page informal format resembled a high school monthly. Features and sports constituted the greatest part of the writing with heavy emphasis on cheerleaders and pompon girls.

When the four year branch of the U of Mo. went through, the staff dropped the name Tiger Cub. As editor George M. Killenberg explained in his first editorial: "UMSL is no longer a fledgling of the Columbia campus. It has matured and the name "Tiger Cub" would be as ridiculous as the "Teddy Bear."

The Mizzou News was the journalistic conscience for UMSL for the following two years. It generally ran a biweekly 8 page paper with such items of interest as: ineffective student government, misuse of student fees, inadequate parking arrangements, high prices at the book store—hmmm? this is beginning to sound hauntingly familiar!

G. M. Killenberg said recently, "We did the best with what we had. At that time the newspaper offices were tucked away in a corner of the Country Club Bldg. That was a step up and on campus from the "Tiger Cub" facilities in the Normandy "Courier" offices.

Twice the Mizzou News hosted a convention of journalists to UMSL for the purpose of gaining experience from professionals. Due to the lack of an established journalism school on this campus, scheduling of formal journalism classes has been sporadic and mostly student originated. For this reason the majority of the newspaper staff has almost always been undergraduates on their way to UMC.

Two years later, in 1966, the newspaper almost went the way of all old generals. Due to lack of a qualified editor the publication had been suspended—kapt.

A COLLAGE OF CURRENT graced the front pages of the the staff which chose it. Its certain elements of a solid photos on this page by that...
At that time, a complete break with the "under the wing of Columbia" imagery was sought. A new team mascot, "The Rivermen" was chosen, and cleverly following the same imagery, "The Current" was born.

Barb Duepner, the Current’s first editor, saw the Current’s primary function as communication. Throughout its 8 years of existence the Current has covered all major events on campus from homecoming dances to moratorium strikes.

With each new changing administration, new departments and various features were added. Some of the most interesting columns were: "Meet the Prof."—a "Mizzou News" feature designed to introduce the faculty to the students; "The Shaft"—a tongue in cheek review of students, faculty, and activities in and around UMSL; "Meet your cheerleader"—a weekly interview with each cheerleader in uniform doing her favorite pose; "The Man from UMSL"—needless to say when and where this came from; "Current Controversy"—a pro and con political column that debated different sides of the same issue. It was in the "Current Controversy" during spring of 1967 that the first rumblings over Vietnam were heard at UMSL.

April Fool’s Day has always provided the UMSL newspaper with an opportunity to unleash their artistic talent. For 3 years the SLUM Clearance—edited by Sitting Bull and William Faulkner was the comic relief for the campus. In 1974, the Current staff innovation for April Fool’s Day was The Stagnant. Unofficial sources have it that this was the most popular and widely read issue of the semester.

This year for the first time, a summer issue of the Current was published. Another innovation for the year is the paper’s own typesetting equipment, which should enable the Current to publish more up to the minute news of campus happenings.

While going through over 14 years of UMSL newspapers, it struck me that the problems of the campus in ’60, ’67, or ’74 seem to be pretty much the same. The ever-present parking problem, the bookstore “rip-off,” the ineffective student government, all still find space in the editorial section and Letters to the Editor.

About the only way to conclude this mess without getting sticky is to say that the Current has always provided an open forum for students and guarantees it will continue.

Students encouraged to use campus services

Patrick Johnson

Although UMSL seems imposing at first, there really are people in those big buildings. People who are willing, waiting and waiting to serve the needs of the students, faculty and staff.

Often students are not aware of the many free and almost free services and activities open to them. Here is a brief summary of a few of these services. For more information and/or a copy of the Student Handbook contact the Office of Student Affairs, Room 262 U. Center, 453-5211.

These services are paid for in great part by your student fees and are there for you to use, so don't feel shy. It was your money so you might as well use it. If you have any suggestions for improvement, feel free to make them.

Financial Aids

Students having financial difficulties can receive application forms in the Office of Student Financial Aid, Room 10, Administration Building.

Those students seeking employment, whether full or part time can get assistance from the Career Planning and Placement Office, 205 Administration, 453-5111. For on-campus employment contact the Personnel Office, University Union, 453-5804.

Health Center

Free health care, in the form of our on-campus medical including first-aid, preseason tests, and general health consultations is available through the Student Health Center, 125 Administration, 453-5671. The Center is staffed by a St. Louis physician, available seven days a week at 7:30 am Monday through Thursday and 10:30 am to 5:30 pm Friday.

Features

Changing schedules

Students who are not satisfied with the courses they are currently enrolled in have the option of petitioning into new courses or changing sections until Sept. 12, last day to add a course this semester. Petitioning fee is $5 after the second day of classes. Thursday, Sept. 26 is the last day to drop a course without receiving a grade or to place a course on pass-fail. Up to 24 course hours can be placed on pass-fail, but students should check carefully with their major department before placing any course on pass-fail, as each department has special restrictions.

Athletics

If you have free time between classes, the athletics department is offering free non-credit instruction in 22 sports, including archery, bowling, athletic dueling, wrestling, swimming, judo, karate, and many others. A complete list of course offerings and times is available at the Information Desk, in Room 325, Multi-Purpose Building. Facilities in the Multi-Purpose Building and the surrounding outside area include: 5 basketball courts, 4 volleyball, 4 badminton and 2 handball courts, wrest-

Student organizations

If you're looking for students with interests similar to yours, join one of the more than 90 recognized organizations on campus (or form your own). Information about these groups can be obtained from the director of student affairs.

Government

New positions are available for those interested in participating in student government. You can be a position as representative on the Central Council or can sign up for a committee. For an application, contact Central Council or stop by the Information Desk.

Tutoring

For students having academic difficulties, Central Council offers a tutoring service at a loss of charge to the student of 75 cents per hour. Tutors are paid $2.50 per hour, the difference being made up by the Central Council with funds from the student activity fees. Applications for both those who wish to tutor and to be tutored are available in the Central Council Office.

In the past, free courses, such as auto mechanics for women or hatha yoga, taught free by those with special talents have been offered through the Community Center. Lately, however, teachers willing to teach free have been hard to find. If you feel you have some special talent that others would be interested in learning, please contact J. D. Cohen, 453-5174 or 433-3714. Class times can be arranged at your convenience.

How to survive in college

Eric K. Banks

Find out what the teacher expects, and know how to play the game; these bits of advice are frequently given when the topic of academic survival is talked about. Success is often measured by how our expectations match reality. Students sometimes view college as a frustrating and disappointing experience. But it can be an enriching and fulfilling period of their lives if they have the insight on how to “get over.”

A misconception is that if students are properly interested and motivated they will learn regardless of the circumstances. Although interest and motivation are two prime ingredients in the formula for success, more is needed. No one would expect to be able to succeed as a neurosurgeon or pro basketball player without training. But each year thousands of students assume they can succeed in college without basic study skills, or an understanding of their university or of themselves.

Next Wed., Sept. 11, at 11:30 am in room 12 of the J. C. Penney Building, the Minority Student Service Coalition will sponsor an Academic Survival Workshop. Problems of students in general and black students in particular will be dealt with, so that the students may gain information which will help them avoid the many pitfalls of college life. A panel of counselors, teachers, and students will be on hand to answer questions related to “learning the ropes.”

Experience is said to be the best teacher. We often learn by our mistakes. But life is too short to learn only by our mistakes and we must rely on information from others. Too many students are forced to drop out before they have learned how to succeed. This workshop is designed to scratch the surface of academic survival and encourage students to make the most of their university and their mental resources.

Symposium on women to be held

“Women and the Law”, a symposium will be conducted by “A Woman’s Place on Sat. Sept. 14, 1974 from 10 am to 6 pm at the WYCA County Branch at 140 N. Brentwood. Suggested donations of $2.50 will go to the Women’s Legal Defense Fund.

University Players, UMSL's theatre organization, has a history which provides insight into the mentality of the campus at that time. The students who were actively involved during the early years of UMSL, the University Players, comprised the same growing pains as the expanding community.

The "come on gang let's do a show" situation was a necessity of the time. In the early years of UMSL, the student population was small (from Benton Hall to the Administration Building), and the theatre organization was minimal. By the end of the first year, the only committee to be attending meetings was the faculty director of drama and the student conductor of the University Players, Douglas Major, the former English professor at St. Louis University who then moved to St. Louis public, at least one student group with no permanent home, structure, or even a staff, was formed to promote curiosity and audience enthusiasm. Each production attempted was pioneering in a sense and the student population was adventuring already to be attending UMSL in its early years.

Street Theatre as a concept has taken root at the university since 1964 in the form of the University Players. As far as actors and staff go, the UP has a transient group with no permanent home, not unlike the gypsy acting troupe. In the past, meetings were held in different locations while cast and technical crew turnover was not uncommon.

Expensive sound equipment and a large stage area was not available for restricted and experimental stages. Every year, with new students and a growing student population, the UP would begin again and again and never without new members.

During those years, faculty advisors also changed, making continuity under this arrangement difficult. And, continuity is all important within the theatre structure.

However, many fine productions emerged despite the difficulties encountered. Past directors included students, such as Wayne Salomon, who was the last President of the UP and is now a graduate of UMSL, along with Peter Wolfe, English professor at UMSL. John T. Groukas, also of the English Dept. and Margaret Jeffries, former speech instructor. That lengthy list of talent directed a wide variety of classic, contemporary and experimental theatre, including comedy, drama and musicals. During the mid-sixties, when the UP Players possessed twice this year's budget, several musicals were staged with the University Chorus teaming up with the theatre.

Last year Denny Bettsworth arrived as the first permanent faculty director of drama and the University Players UMSL. Bettsworth implemented course work in History of the Theatre, acting and stagecraft technique into the productions. A successful theatre community needs minimal facilities. This year those needs will be met by space leased from Marillac College at 7804 Natural Bridge. An auditorium for performances, storage space for equipment, sets and props, and a shop area for construction of sets are included. Jim Fye, a set designer and technical advisor with an M.F.A. from Tulane University, has joined the faculty this year and will supervise the University Players in technical phases of production.

Bettsworth explained, "My biggest concern with the move to facilities at Marillac is our lack of visibility and decentralization of U Players. We'll need to spread the word of our new location quickly and efficiently because of our low profile on campus." Besides building a community of theatre people through classroom work and more informal U. Players meetings, there will be shop hours at the satellite theatre afternoons and evenings. Times will be published and posted. Describing possible expansion and diversification of the theatre program, Bettsworth emphasized that creative 'spinoffs' such as improvisational groups and reader's theatre, while encouraged, would not be officially directed or sponsored by U. Players. "It is essential to maintain artistic integrity and commitment to quality now," he said. "Realistically we are working with the fact of budget constraint approval and the forms cited are experimental. They could prove to be an embarrassment." The Administration has now made possible a permanent home for the U. Players and a satellite theatre by securing Room 105 Benton Hall. Necessary structural changes and equipment were added as the first production. The "Visit" by Friedrich Doremmart on October 19 is the first official play and includes Betty Cooper, the university's choristers and "Saturday Night at the Movies.", the production was a success and will be performed twice this semester.

Douglas Major, the former student conduction of the UMSL choral groups, has been appointed assistant conductor and pianist at Washington Cathedral. Major completed three years of studies at UMSL. He became the youngest musician to play with the Louis Symphony Orchestra on an East Coast tour last winter. In addition, he traveled throughout Europe this summer as music director of the Jefferson City Little Theatre, Jefferson City, Mo.

People Show
Impromptu about people you know

Dee Gerdig

The myriad of character types was done swiftly and simply by changing of hats and gags. They were examples of, again, persons we all know: the hard-hat who complains of too high taxes, the good-intentioned but homely housewife, and the crucading businessman. They came complete with stereotype characterizations to match.

’Parents and Kids,” the second part of the show, was also the most enjoyable. It was also the part where themes were more apparent: the bickering younger generation has for its parents a world view that is neither. It is the “People Show” for the genuine impromptu and absolutely delightful.

The show is about people. The Street Theatre’s final show presented by Ron Powell and will probably play an important role in the St. Louis arts scene and will present the good-intentioned but homely housewife. They came complete with prototype types such as ’Gypsy Riders’ and ’Managers were delighted with the crowd. Hartsfield’s success stems from a lot of guitar picking, double leads, fine harmonies, and precision timing. ’I’m coming home” is a song that does all of this and was certainly the favorite of the evening. The group got a good reception and will probably play an important role in the St. Louis arts scene. Kenny Loggins and Messina booted and harrowed their hearts to review many of their popular songs. The duo played ’Whiskey ‘s”

Country back-up assists rock sound of Loggins and Messina

Kenny Loggins and Jim Messina made their long awaited appearance at the beautiful Ambassador Theatre on August 17 & 18. There were three powerful shows presented by Ron Powell with a late show on Saturday night.

It was a mellow evening of music beginning with a Chicago group, ’Hartsfield.’ They proved to be an excellent complement to L & K with their unique style of country music. They have just released their second album, ’The sound of it all,’ which was a dynamic song in concert. Other favorites such as ’Gypsy Riders’ and ’Managers were delighted with the crowd. Hartsfield’s success stems from a lot of guitar picking, double leads, fine harmonies, and precision timing. ’I’m coming home” is a song that does all of this and was certainly the favorite of the evening. ’Parents and Kids,” these themes were not clearly brought out, either in the dialogue or on the show itself. The casualness of the performers occasionally made following the show difficult. Finally, the words to the songs were probably found, but they could not be understood.

Despite all that, the ’People Show” is certainly worth the twenty minutes or so that it takes to watch, if only to see what a good time the performers are having doing it. Almost wholesome, the show is pleasant to view and as American as apple pie.

The Street Theatre’s final ’People Show” will be done at the Frue de Normandie later this month.

Rivermen steered unsteady course in '73-74 competition

Brian Flinchpapgh

The adage "save the best till last" didn't apply to the Rivermen of intercollegiate competition at UMSL. Although the '73-'74 season was not a banner one for the team, it became clear that all the ingredients were there for Coach Don Dallas to mold a championship squad.

At the beginning of the '73-'74 season, the annual sports and activity flyers were distributed by the UMSL Sports Information Department. They were the modern black headlines "Rivermen Ramblings," at the top of the flyer, in the frontpage. No two words seem more appropriate in summing up the highs and lows of the '73-'74 sports scene at UMSL.

The team through fall, winter and spring '73-'74 began well with a step forward with the first NCAA title garnered by any team in UMSL history, a step backward with the difficulties of a strange basketball season and stumbled with almost as strange a baseball season.

This was the year when women's athletic activities became more than a series of exhibitions and when individual effort often overshadowed team accomplishments.

This was also a year when developments, off the playing field, were as important as those on.

Squads at UMSL saw the advent of SLACAA (St. Louis Area College Athletic Association), a loose formation of local area institutions. Athletic director and head basketball coach, Chuck Smith, was a driving force in setting up this local group to try and decide area championship in such activities as swimming, basketball, and football. The conference play to include other sports than football, however, seems to be a definite possibility.

Under the tutelage of Judy Whitney, and with the blessing of athletic director, Chuck Smith, the newly formed women's athletic program found a solid base in 1973-'74.

Sports at UMSL saw the formation of the GAIAW (Gateway Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women). The season past were often the astounding performances of freshman guard Bob Bone. The 6-foot, former Collinsville High star, averaged 23.1 points-per-game and is a key to Rivermen fortunes in the near future. As dramatic development as any athletic event on the UMSL campus was the emergence of the Women's Intercollegiate Sports Program in 1973-'74.

In their first year of intercollegiate competition, the women managed to capture a GAIAW (Gateway Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) title in basketball and had winning seasons in tennis and volleyball.

UMSL, wrestling and swimming squads ended their respective seasons a little short of expectations. The tankers, with strong efforts from such stalwarts as Steve Stiffelman, Jim Wheeler, Monte Strah and Mark Kessler captured second place in the first SLACAA championship in swimming. Despite this success, the tankmen finished with a 5-7 regular season mark.

Wrestling coach Von Henry saw his charges post an 8-8 mark. Of even more interest were the performances of Greg Holmes and Tom Bowden. Greg Holmes, a 118 pound standout, posted a 20-1 record and both he and Bowden participated in the NCAA College Division wrestling championships in Fullerton California.

Both tennis and golf teams finished with over .500 records. The netmen put together a 11-9 year while the golfing Rivermen beat 56 per cent of the teams they played in tournaments throughout the spring. The baseball Rivermen were not so lucky. UMSL head baseball coach Fred Nelson found, to his dismay, that a squad which finished 24-7 the previous year and forth in the NCAA College Division playoffs, could finish with an 18-20 in '74.

Open 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.
In a battle of last year's NCAA Division II soccer champions, the St. Louis University soccer Rivermen will vie with St. Louis University in the newly established St. Louis Cup on Sept. 13 at Busch Stadium. The cup, which will be awarded to the winner symbolizes St. Louis college soccer supremacy.

Plans call for the project, a brainchild of St. Louis University in hand with Contemporary Productions, to become an annual affair between both schools. Both the Rivermen and the Billikens are no strangers to each other and interest in the series has grown for some time.

"Our thought was that our series has grown to the point where it could take on the importance that it hasn't," explained Larry Albus, St. Louis University athletic director. Albus noted that the series has grown for some time. "It's a financial plum as far as we're concerned," said Albus. But he went on to emphasize that "while the downtown campus may reap most of the profits they might well absorb the possible loss. "It's their game, they're picking up the costs. There will be a sizable draw and we (UMSL) won't hurt their draw," Smith stated.

Tickets for the game are available at the UMSL Information Desk, St. Louis University, University Store and Goodies Ticket Agency. Prices for the 7:30 pm contest are $3.00 for adults and $2.00 for students and those 16 and under.

Digital Detours.

Women's pom pom, sports, tryouts

The practice schedule for two of the fall sports of the women's intercollegiate athletic program, were announced by Judy Whitney, director of Women's Athletics at UMSL.

The UMSL soccer Rivermen, defending NCAA Division II champions, will host the NCAA Division II Soccer Championship on the UMSL campus, Aug. 28-30. The tournament coincides with the Division I championships to be hosted by St. Louis U., both to be held on successive weekends.

Held the previous year at Springfield College in Springfield, Mass., the Rivermen defeated Adelphi 1-0 in a semifinal match and California-Fullerton 3-0 in the final. The tournament will feature representatives from the South, East, West and Midwest regional districts. However, sparse crowds apparently led to the transfer of the tournament here.

"They were somewhat disappointed in attendance during the tournament and afterward contacted us," said Don Dallas, UMSL soccer coach. However Dallas was enthusiastic about the situation of having both Division I and II championships in such close proximity to repute another.

"Combining two events on following weekends brings them to the attention of the St. Louis fan where titles have been won by St. Louis players," Dallas's comment is buttressed by observing the success of St. Louis college men's soccer past seasons. UMSL won the Division II crown, St. Louis U., the Division I title, Forsan Valley the Junior College Championship, and Quincy College the NAIA crown.

The UMSL Rivermen, before opening their season with St. Louis University in the St. Louis Cup game, will also play the last of three preseason contests on Sept. 7th against an UMSL alumni team at 1:30 pm at UMSL.

Women's pom pom, sports, tryouts

The practice schedule for two of the fall sports of the women's intercollegiate athletic program, were announced by Judy Whitney, director of Women's Athletics at UMSL.

Women's volleyball and basketball will tryout for one of UMSL's women's varsity teams. Those interested should contact Judy Whitney in Room 225 in the Multi-Purpose Building or call 453-5641.

There will be a meeting in Room 218 of the Multi-Purpose Building on Sunday, Sept. 8 at 1:30 pm for all UMSL women interested in trying for the UMSL cheerleading/pom pom team.

Those unable to attend the Sept. 8 meeting may contact Judy Whitney, director of the squad, in Room 233 of the Multi-Purpose Building or call her at 453-5641.
