Poll to explore center expansion

 Hank Vogt

• A proposal to expand the University Center — financed by student activity fees — would have to receive strong student backing in the student union referendum, according to campus officials. About 5,000 students will be polled sometime next month to determine student sentiment for the proposed expansion. If the results of the survey are positive, a referendum to increment student activity fees to pay for the additions will be placed on the general election ballot in April.

Funded only by student fees.

The state legislature appropriates all funds for university building construction except when the building is for student activities. Student fees must pay for those buildings.

While the referendum will not act on the fees, Interim Chancellor Emeritus C. Turner indicated he would recommend an increase in the fees if the students supported the measure. The increased revenue would go to the Board of Curators, which has the authority to raise the fees.

We wouldn’t recommend an increase without student backing,” Bob Engleken, student body president and member of the University Center advisory board said. “We want to inform the students on what the situation is and let them make their own decision.”

CROWDED LOUNGE: Sometimes dubbed "the zoo," the University Center lounge is often overcrowded with musicians, card players and students studying. A poll to expand the center will focus on the grades of space and recreation students would like to see included in the expansion. (Photos by Janice Vogt)

Calloway predicts dim future for city: separation of city, county cited

Brad Bar III

The future for St. Louis could be a downhill road, Ernest Calloway told an UMSL audience last Friday. Currently, an assistant professor of urban affairs at St. Louis University, Calloway is also a former director of research for Local 686 of the Teamsters Union.

Calloway spoke primarily about the decline of the city of St. Louis. He asserted that 100 years ago the city was on its way to being the largest trade center in the country. The potential power of the "mighty" Mississippi River was at our disposal, Calloway said, but "we failed to utilize the river fully."

"We could have been a prime example of railroad usage in the midwest, but we failed to take advantage of it," he continued. "Instead we let Chi­ cago become the number one railroad center in the country.

Calloway told his audience that the mass automobile in­ dustry once wanted to settle here because of St. Louis' central location. They were rejected, he said, by overzealous bankers and other powerful investors who controlled the city econom­ ically and made all of the decisions about the potential innovations in the city.

"The businessmen were afraid of all sorts of competition that might develop," he said, "and would consequently infringe upon their business enterprise."

This, Calloway stated, has continually held back a city that should have been one of the most influential in the nation. This has greatly retarded the progress of the city, he con­ tinued, and St. Louis is now in a state of decline.

Concerning the separation of St. Louis city and St. Louis county, Calloway said, "St. Louis made a stupid move in deciding to become freest. On this decision alone we have paid a tremendous price by not being part of the county."

Calloway felt that that was a grave error because "we cut ourselves off from potential power and growth."

Because of this, he continued, "St. Louis is a present-oriented city rather than a future-oriented city."

He did show some optimism for the city, "I think St. Louis can be saved," he said. "We must recognize the hard fact that we are going down."

He realizes that it would not be an easy task to revitalize the city, that it would require know­ ledge of new concepts of urban living, race and the future.

Calloway also stated that the concept of ghetto needs to be "eliminated whether it is cultural or racial."

If this city were under "proper­ ly geared political leadership," Calloway stated, "I say, St. Louis could become the medical and educational center of the midwest.

Dudman to speak on Ford, Kissinger

Richard Dudman, Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, will speak on "The Ford Administration: Past Performance - Future Promise" on Monday, Feb. 10. The lecture, which begins at 10:45 am in 100 Lucas, is free and open to the public.

Dudman will remain on campus for an international stud­ ions seminar on "The Future of U.S. Foreign Policy and Henry Kissinger" at 3 pm in 331 SSBE. The lecture and seminar are sponsored by PACE and the Center for International Studies.
Library reserve policy brought into question by survey

Mark Henderson

Two-hour reserve material should be available for a longer period of time, according to a sample survey conducted by a sub-committee of the Ad Hoc Committee to Review Administrative Structure at UMSL.

Over 197 users of the library questioned endorsed this as one of the three main problems with library facilities.

The sub-committee personally interviewed a cross-section of users concerning seven specific problems that had been presented for the survey in terms of importance and immediacy.

The other two leading improvements that received support were, increasing the number of hours which the library is open and enforcing the rules limiting noise in the library more effectively.

Other suggestions went to the users of the library which did not get as much response were: increasing times when reference librarians are available, tightening of security, the opening of more study cars for student use and the installation of coin operated security locks for the use of library patrons.

Those people who were classified night users, between 5 pm and closing, were split about the most important questions. They listed their concerns for more time for reserve articles and increasing the hours the library is open. Seventy per cent of the night users would like to see the library open later at night and 58 per cent want extra hours over the weekend.

Noise was less important to the night users, most probably, said Mike Segalla, a member of the sub-committee, because of fewer people.

The cross section consisted of asking 197 users of the library; this included faculty as well as students. Anyone in the library was classified as a library user.

The sub-committee was appointed by the Senate and the chancellor, and the Ad-Hoc committee was started at the initiation of President Banchford.

Lyman Sargent, associate professor of political science and member of the sub-committee, said:

Sargent explained that the purpose of the sub-committee was to evaluate the administrative structure of the library and report to the president any suggestions on improving the structure.

'The committee was very impressed with the present library administration. The problems indicated by the users survey were not administrative but monetary.'

Program for transfer students

Transfer students at UMSL are invited to a program designed to assist in the "transition to UMSL." The program will be held on Wednesday, Feb. 12 in Room 318 Lucas from 11:40 to 1 pm.

Staff will be on hand from the Office of Admissions, the Office of the Dean of Student Affairs, the Veterans Affairs Office and the Developmental Skills Center. Advisors from the College of Arts and Sciences, the School of Business and the School of Education will also be present.

Students having problems with transferring credits, duplication of course materials or other related problems are invited to attend.

Prospective transfers to UMSL are also welcome, said Dennis Dolban, assistant dean of student affairs.

Slowing down doesn’t mean stopping

Sue Schellstover

Go home. We don’t need old people like you anymore. Although you would never hear these actual words spoken, in effect this is what many older employees are told when they reach 60.

Dibby Falconer, gerontology specialist at UMSL, is one of the growing numbers of people who would like to see this situation changed.

"Forced retirement for all at the arbitrary age of 65," she says is demeaning. Older citizens are suddenly labeled too old to be productive. In fact, many are still capable of doing their jobs as well as before.

"How fast a person ages is an individual matter, and can’t be determined by age alone."

The traditional practice of giving a man a party, a gold watch and sending him home is what makes a man grow old.

"All at once he finds himself of nothing of what he was yesterday and he feels as though there is not much he can do about it."

Falconer, recently named director of Missouri University’s statewide Extension program to assist the aged, is trying to help.

As a gerontology specialist, her duties include developing and coordinating workshops, curriculum, seminars and training programs for staff members working with the elderly both on and off campus throughout the state.

These programs are aimed at making people more aware of and sensitive to the needs and problems of the elderly.

It is her dream to see a unit on aging in all introductory text-books such as psychology and sociology. Such material has a rightful place in them, she feels, because we all must get old.

"Looking ahead to the situation could only be helpful in gaining knowledge of how certain problems can be dealt with, and might also make us a little more sympathetic and patient with the man who takes forever to get across the street."

As there are 20 different extension areas located throughout the state, Falconer spends part of her time traveling from one district to the other.

"Out in the field" it is her job to work with the person in that district in planning and organizing improved service for older people. She also cooperates with Lincoln University, which is connected with the program as well.

Among the major difficulties faced by those in their later years are lack of income and health problems.

Thanks to inflation, a person living on a fixed income from social security, or on past savings, has a hard time meeting expenses.

As a person gets older, he or she has to slow down, forgets things, and can’t do everything he once took for granted.

Educational programs are also part of the project. Unfortunately, however, Falconer has found it necessary to have to "sell" the idea of any kind of educational experience to the elderly.

"Many of them," she says, "have the old-fashioned image of what learning is like. To them going to school meant sitting with their hands folded on their desk, keeping silent and always being good. In addition, you have to convince them that they still can learn, that they are still capable of absorbing new information."

No-smoking policy should be enforced

It is amazing how many people can no longer read in this country. Every bus has a sign with the very simple words, "No smoking." Three weeks ago while riding the Cross Country Home, this reporter witnessed the driver give a passenger a cigarette, allowed the cigarette to be lit, and it was consumed in its entirety by the time the reporter got off. On every pack of cigarettes are the words, "Warning: The Surgeon General has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health." Some have heeded that warning and have stopped. Others have by never starting, and some have not.

One major question is whose health are we referring to? There should be no question that cigarette smokers have the right to smoke; that is their prerogative. It is against the rights and health of non-smokers, however, to allow smoking in public facilities and buildings. Smokers can remain healthy and relatively comfortable by posting a no-smoking sign. Non-smokers are constantly uncomfortable and occasionally made ill when forced to inhale someone else's smoke.

A social consideration should also be made in passing. Some people look upon the cigarette as a social crutch, a lampshade to hide behind to shield oneself. Here at UMSL, a great many complaints are made about the smoking in classrooms. Some smokers may justify this act as their right, but again, the health and comfort of all should be taken into consideration. Smokers can smoke after class; when a captive audience is not present to be irritated by it. When so many people begin to complain, others should listen.

To make matters worse, instructors also engage during class. A lab instructor in Sociology 10 lights up without considering others' reactions to it, likewise a lab instructor in Political Science II. This reporter found one room in Clark Hall vulgar. The room was filled with a thick fog of cigarette smoke. Ashes were rubbed into the floor, as were cigarette butts. It was not a very pretty sight. Certainly there were many uncomfortable people in the room, since the door was kept closed and there were no windows to open.

The danger of being a fire hazard is important to remember. There are no ash trays in most of the room, so cigarette butts get placed on the floor, often carelessly. It is conceivable that a fellow student's clothes could catch on fire by this careless practice.

Besides the fact that it is unhealthy to those who do not smoke; it is unignorable, the fire element, and social considerations, what else can be said in support of a movement to stop smoking in class rooms? It could be very economical to the smoker, if by not smoking in classrooms a smoker could cut down his smoking by a pack a day he would be saving $3.50 a week.

Professors would have one less distraction worry to about if they would enforce a non-smoking policy. Talk between students looking for a match or a cigarette would decrease. Students would not have to look at the professor through a haze of no smoking. The professor could keep a student's attention rather than having him search his coat pocket for his habit.

In short, UMSL should initiate a new policy of not allowing cigarette smoking in the classroom, and the rule should be enforced. If not at a university level, then the professors should listen to the complaints of the many students who want to be heard and begin their own policy. The arguments for such a policy are indeed many, the arguments against such a policy are nearly nonexistent.

Students shouldn't pay twice

Dear Editor:

Because of the wording of the 1968 proposal, I have found that I was incorrect in stating that the University Center belongs entirely to the students, and I stand corrected. The proposal of 1968 states that the Student Center shall consist of a new student center building, providing food service as well as space for student activities, lounges, bookstore, and administrative offices for the Student Center and program directors.

It is interesting to note that Mr. Edwards refers to this proposal as representing a guarantee of space to the bookstore and administrative offices. It stands to reason, therefore, that the Central Council and others now housed in the Administration Building, being student activities, are also guaranteed space. The fact that Central Council is housed in the Student Center does not mean Central Council has more space guarantee space than there is space available, or that the students were not consulted when the University Center's floor had to be reduced. They should not be required to pay twice—once for space that should be, but isn't available, and then again for space in the proposed University Center addition.

The fact that students are the only ones without space demonstrates to me that there is and has been a considerable lack of concern for the needs of the students on this campus.

Still fired up over ice

Dear Editor:

Recently I read a letter from a concerned student in regards to emergency medical care on campus after normal hours. I would like to echo the writer's opinion and add an experience of my own. The night before the gym was to be closed for Christmas break I played basketball with friends. During the game I sprained my ankle so my friends requested ice in order to keep the swelling down. I was then informed that the training room was locked and no one had a key so there was no ice available.

I am sure that if I were one of Mr. Smith's players I would have had all the ice I could have hoped for. As an Alumnus I feel that my experience in the Athletic Department entitles me to emergency first aid when needed. After all, is it not our cost?

Aesthetic senses assaulted

Dear Editor:

Smoking in classrooms at UMSL seems to be a problem the administration is either ignoring or is unable to control. Why, if smoking is permitted, are there no ash trays in classrooms? Students are forced to grind their cigarettes into the floor, which is not only unsightly, but must cost much more to keep clean than ash trays would cost.

If we must have smoking in the classrooms, and there are many students who disagree with this practice, must our aesthetic senses be assaulted, as well as the air polluted?

Galloping gourmetes stampede snack bar

Bill McEllan

In our never ending search for "the" place to dine, several places and myself chose to partake of our noon meal at a nearby, high-brow location. One of our number was so excited that she almost dropped her tray.

Our choice was the Snack Bar on the upper floor of the University Center.

From previous experience we knew that we could not expect a bountiful to help us find a table yet the shores and alternating atmosphere was still palatable. Undaunted, we straightened our bow ties and marched on.

After we had gained access to two table near each other, an operation much like a government relocation project, we went to find nourishment.

As we picked up our trays, we were surprised to find most of them damp or dripping, and the disposable whiteware, a tacky, white plasticware. We found some spots on them.

Restaurant review

Those who ordered "special" sandwiches - they used the word loosely - were delighted to see an illustrated recipe of each sandwich, nicely done and individually framed on an horizontally displayed doorknob.

The recipes themselves promised gastronomic delight, in an adventurous way.

We had lined up to place our orders at 12:55. All of our orders were taken by 1:00. Not very fast for a cafeteria, but we did order four different sandwiches.

At 1:07, I was alone waiting for my sandwich, a Fish Alami. At 1:10, one of the help was kind enough to ask me what I had ordered.

Curious as to what caused the delay, I asked if many people order a Fish Alami, and was informed that it was the first for the day.

By 1:15 I was seated with my companions, two of whom had finished their meal.

Fish Alami, 85 cents, boasted a toasted hot dog bun, grilled frank, a generous ladle of cheese sauce and a slice of bacon was better received. Although the cheese sauce is distinctive only because it helps keep the hot dog warm.

It helps keep the hot dog warm. The drinks were "fair to good" by consensus, and all agreed that the soda price, in spite of a recent markup, is still comparatively low.

A regular order hamburger, 40 cents, was described in total, as "tasteless. The Chuck Chuck consumer wished that it was. Only the tartar sauce means having to say you're sorry.

The Ba Ce Dog, 65 cents, a toasted hot dog bun, grilled frank, a generous ladle of cheese sauce and a slice of bacon was better received. Although the cheese sauce is distinctive only because it helps keep the hot dog warm.

On a recent visit, the cafeteria was out of buns for the Ba Ce Dog, so it was agreed that a smaller one could be used.

This added a mes to an already dripping sandwich. In fact it is observed that for "specialty" servings for four people, five trays are required, the extra one being just for napkins.

The Snack Bar is busy and it looks it. Decorations are few. A potentially appealing view of a brick wall is marred by dirty window.

"My tongue feels as if the entire Russian army had just walked across it in their stocking feet."

He chased women. He drank scotch. He hated children, dogs and Philadelphia.

He was W.C. Fields and he's coming to UMSL in a one man show.

One man shows are the American stage's answer to in-flight entertainment. They are well suited to Field's comic wit. Given the excess of Field's vaudevillian act, his grandson, Ronald Fields, has compiled "W.C. Fields & His Poor." "His Poor" will be at UMSL on Saturday, April 22, as part of the University Programming Board's spring calendar.

UPB is responsible for the programs priced to fit student's budgets which are presented at UMSL each semester. This semester's schedule is diverse.

On Saturday, Feb. 22, the Young Eternal Souls (YES), a black choir, will perform gospel, rock and soul music. YES formed in February, 1973 in St. Louis through Rev. C.D. Scott Belcher's Immor tal Lutheran Church, 3540 Marcon Ave.

The group consists of 18 young blacks, has performed widely in Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Texas and Michigan, and with such noted people as Dick Gregory, Ralph Abernathy, and Jessie Jackson.

The following weekend, on Friday, Feb. 28, Highwood Stringband will pay a visit to UMSL. With two members on fiddles (Walt Koak and Bob Porta), one on banjo (Ma Benford), one on guitar (Doug Dorshag), and one on bass fiddle (Jackie Clarkand), Highwood Stringband will perform old-time string music formerly popular in the Scottish Highlands.

These young and talented four men and one woman began as a group in the spring of 1972 and have met with success since then.

Besides winning prizes at fiddle conventions and festivals, they have traveled the U.S. extensively as part of the Scotish Institute's Touring Performance Service. They capture the spirit of men and music.

Nestalgia buffs will want to know Saturday, March 4, for Joseph Riffin's performance of some of Scott Joplin's piano rag.

Riffin holds several music degrees and has lectured at several eastern schools and universities on Baroque and Renaissance music.

Although he considers piano rags just for fun, his performance is anything but casual. A one-time album of his, where he plays many Joplin rags, has done much to promote the now little known Joplin in the last few years.

Last Saturday, Feb. 11, the Louis Jazz Quartet will appear on Sunday, April 6 for a memorable evening of jazz music. Three members play musical instruments made by Keppe nberger on bass and bass guitar; Ed Nicholson on keyboards; and Charles Payne on percussion, while the fourth member, Jeanne Tress, uses her voice as an instrument.

Their repertoire will include blues, ballads, gospel, pop, rock, some Eastern and classical music, but primarily jazz.

They, too, have met with rave reviews wherever they have been.

Rivermen take third in a row

Lucy Zapf

Last Saturday night the UMSL Rivermen used their home court advantage to increase their winning streak to three games. By defeating Calver Stockton 89 - 60 the cagers pushed the season's win-loss record over the .500 mark at 8-7. In a game which started out slow and did not really pick up, the Rivermen took the lead in the first five minutes and kept it. They seemed to walk away with the victory, and walk they did. Whether due to the tiredness of mid-season, the defense of the opponent, or the letdown from the big game against Loyola last week, the game's play was slow and sometimes sloppy. Bob Bone lead the Rivermen in points, scoring just under his average of 27, with 25. But the real spark of the team was at the other guard position. Dale Willis, 6-3 sophomore, pumped down 6 rebounds. Other victims of the defense were Wynn, 6-3 sophomore, pumped down 10 rebounds. Willis handled was really outstanding, frequently having the 2 and 3 offensive rebound. He also allowed Loyola to go to the foul line only three times. After the game coach Chuck Gehrig said UMSL beat a good team.

The Rivermen are on the road for their next game, traveling to Lebanon, Ill. to play McKendree College on Thursday, Feb. 6 at 8 pm. McKendree, with a 14-6 record will be a tough opponent for the Rivermen, but in the last few games they seem to have been playing steady, defense and creating offense and have united into a single unit.

Women are now 6-0

With a win over St. Louis University in a Thursday night contest, the women's basketball team from UMSL improved its record 6-0. Other victims of the women include Marquette, Missouri Western, Southeast Missouri State, SIU-Edwardsville and St. Louis by a forfeit.

Leading the women in their first start have been Carmen Forest, Carol Migneron and Sandy Paulsen. Forest, a 5-10 sophomore forward, is leading the team in scoring with an average of 20 points per game while Migneron, a versatile 5-7 guard, is second with an average of 10.2. Surprisingly, Migneron is leading the team in rebounding with an average of 14.6 per game, with Paulsen, a 5-11 center, grabbing 10 per game and Forest 10.4 per game.

For the season the women are averaging 64.2 points per game compared to the opponents 34.5. The UMSL squad is also averaging 46.5 rebounds per outing.

The next home game for the UMSL women is on Feb. 6, when they host Marquette Community College in a 6 pm contest. After that they take to the road for three straight games: Feb. 10 against Principia, Feb. 14 against Southeast Missouri State, and Feb. 15 against Murray State.
