Bookstore robbery averted

University officials suspect that two or three men may have planned to rob the bookstore for the second time in a week Monday, before they were averted by bookstore personnel.

In addition, the men are suspected of planning to rob the candy counter in the bookstore annex, located in the University Center lobby.

According to Kenneth Langston, bookstore manager, two or three men stood in line at a counter in the store at about 2:30pm Sept. 15. One of the men made a purchase, moved to the end of the counter and began speaking with the cashier.

“One guy went through,” Langston said. “He bought a potato chip with a $20 bill, then got down to the end of the counter and started talking to her (the cashier), asking her how much a cigarette lighter cost.”

Two more men used the same tactic last Tuesday, when the store was robbed of $520. While a cashier turned around to speak to a man at the end of her counter, a second man scooped the money from her cash register’s open drawer.

“He was going back and forth, trying to get her confused, and she just shut her drawer” [See “Bookstores,” page 2]

University cuts gas usage; fall semester enrollment rises

The University of Missouri has reduced its gasoline consumption by 21 percent, reported Tom Hussey, UM’s assistant vice president for business services, at the University Board of Curators’ Sept. 12 meeting.

An increase in fall enrollment for the four campuses was also reported at the meeting, which was held on the Columbia campus, by UM President James Olson.

According to university figures, gasoline used by the university in 1979-80 totaled 556,561 gallons consumed during 1978-79.

During the gasoline shortage, Governor Joseph Teasdale issued an executive order requiring state agencies in Missouri to reduce their consumption by ten percent within one year.

Hussey reported that purchasing higher gas mileage vehicles, reducing the number of university cars and expanding the use of ear pools, helped achieve the drop in the university’s use of fuel.

UMSL showed an overall reduction of more than 3,000 gallons. During 1978-79, UMSL consumed 39,740 gallons compared to 36,676 used in 1979-80.

In addition, a far-reaching energy policy, campus-wide, has been developed and implemented by the university in an effort to obtain maximum efficiency from energy resources.

The policy, already in progress, sets standards to achieve energy goals in existing buildings, new buildings, transportation, energy equipment operation and equipment purchases.

“This is probably as comprehensive an energy policy as exists in higher education anywhere in the United States,” Hussey said at the curator meeting.

In other matters, Olson reported campus-wide enrollment is expected to reach approximately 54,000, based on preliminary figures.

“Probably somewhere between two-and-a-half percent and three percent” will be the enrollment increase for UMSL, said Glenn Allen, associate registrar of records and registration.

The exact figures have not yet been determined, since some students may still decide to drop out.

“These students are not counted,” Allen said. “The figures should be available some time next week.”

Figures for the 1981-82 request were released at the meeting. The Coordinating Board of Higher Education (CBHE) Fiscal Affairs Committee has recommended a budget

Group discusses elections, bylaws

Earl Swift

Members of the Student Assembly won’t know how many representatives seats on the body will be made available to incoming freshmen during the group’s new student elections until four days before the elections are held, according to Student Association officers.

Lawrence Wines, cochairman of the Association’s Administrative Committee, told the group’s Executive Committee Sept. 15 that the earliest date by which election organizers may obtain information on this semester’s elections will be Sept. 25.

The number of seats available for new students are determined by enrollment. Each student elected to a seat represents 500 new students.

According to Pat Connaughton, Assembly parliamentarian, university officials told him that enrollment was expected to be around 3,000 new students, give or take 500.”

New food service manager

Sue Tegarden

A new food service manager, Gregory Bolsko, has been hired by the university. Bolsko, who has worked on various food service operations, will assist in planning the renovation and expansion of the University Center.

The expansion is presently in the planning stages, according to Bill Edwards, director of the University Center. Completion of the project is expected to be at the beginning of the next school year.

Talks have been scheduled with the Central Administration in connection with the renovation. Edwards said the next step will be selecting the architect.

The biggest problem during the remodeling would be how to move people around while keeping them satisfied at the same time, Bolsko said. The main problem at present is the inefficient use of space, he said.

Bolsko is proposing that the service line by moved back, which would accommodate more seating space. This would create a “scramble-type line,” to utilize the least amount of space, while giving the best possible service.

The main objective of the renovation is to generate more and new business for the snack bar and cafeteria area. A complete overhaul is planned.

“You won’t be able to recognize it,” Edwards said. Booths, carpeting and new decor will be added in order to give it the look of a regular commercial-type restaurant.

Bolsko said he hopes it will be a place where students and staff may come to enjoy a pleasant dinner in equally pleasant surroundings.

Ideas concerning catering rooms are also being discussed as part of the expansion. This would enable campus organizations to hold their dinners and other functions at school, without having to reserve other outside facilities.

Papers donated to UMSL

The papers of the late internationally known medical missionary, John F. Kennedy, are to be given to UMSL as a part of the Western Historical Manuscript Collection and the State Historical Society of Missouri.

"His dedication of national significance," said Anne Kenney of the UMSL Thomas Jefferson Library. "I think this is a tremendous gift."

Many of the papers will deal with the conditions in Southeast Asia prior to the U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War. The papers are also expected to be valuable for medical researchers.

Keg-roll benefit held

A keg-roll benefitting Danny Thomas' St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital and UMSL's Carpenter's Hall, located at 1401 Hampton Ave, has been reserved for the dance.

"It's a good central location for any UMSL student," said Rick Blanton, coordinator of student life and Student Activities.

Doors open at 7:30pm and the band plays from 8pm-12:30am. Cost is $3 per person, which includes soda and ice for drinking.

Anxiety workshop offered

The Center for Academic Development's Mathematics Unit of UMSL is sponsoring a free six session math anxiety workshop. The one-and-a-half hour sessions are aimed at helping students deal with math anxiety which may be inhibiting academic success.

Applications are available in JSS or SSB, SSB, or 425 Parkway. For more information, call 553-5654 or 553-5711.

Assertive classes given

Six assertive training classes for men and women have been scheduled by UMSL at a variety of locations throughout the St. Louis metropolitan area. The first session will be held on Mondays, Sept. 22-Oct. 20 at 6:30-9pm at the St. Charles City-County Library.

Assertive training, part of UMSL's Continuing Education program, teaches participants to express ideas, feelings, and wants in a way that is honest and non-threatening. Goals for the course are to create more effective communication, higher self-esteem, and better relationships.

For more information, or to register, contact 553-5511.

Film series showing

A free film series featuring women artists is being shown at UMSL on Wednesdays at 12pm in 118 Lucas Hall.

The series is sponsored by the university's College of Arts and Sciences, Department of Art, and Continuing Education Office. For more information, call 553-5960.

Home-buying course held

A five session course on "What You Should Know About Buying a Home" will be offered at UMSL on Wednesday evenings, 7-9pm Oct. 1-19. The program is offered by the UMSL Economics Department, in cooperation with the Home Owners Warranty Registration Council of Missouri, Inc., and the Home Builders Association of Greater St. Louis.

The seminar will be conducted by a team of seminar leaders representing the home buying market in the St. Louis area. Sessions will include question and answer time as well as discussion.

Registration for the course is $20 per individual or $25 per couple. For more information, contact the Continuing Education office at 553-5960.

Homecoming dance scheduled

The 1980-81 homecoming dance, traditionally intended to take place in September, has been set for Nov. 1 at Carpenter's Hall.

Homecoming festivities this year will include king and queen nominations/elections, a homecoming soccer game, and the annual coronation dance.

To start off the activities, homecoming king and queen nominations will be accepted Sept. 29-Oct. 29 in Rm. 262, University Center. Candidates will be announced during half-time at the homecoming soccer game Oct. 25.

Elections for king and queen will be in the University Center lobby and SSB lobby, Oct. 29-31, 9am-2pm and 5-7pm. Any student presenting a valid UMSL ID can vote.

Carpenter's Hall, located at 1401 Hampton Ave, has been reserved for the dance.

"It's a good central location for any UMSL student," said Rick Blanton, coordinator of student life and Student Activities.

Doors open at 7:30pm and the band plays from 8pm-12:30am. Cost is $3 per person, which includes soda and ice for drinking.

Another future project Bolsko hopes to establish is to form a student-managed staff. This would help employees be more efficiently trained for their jobs, he said, and hopefully cut down on employee turnover.

To find a crew and be able to keep them until they graduate is one way Bolsko sees to improve the food service program immensely. Bolsko plans to make the UMSL food service program the best, by featuring "fine atmosphere and excellent service."
A new Optometry school has been established at UMSL this fall with a starting enrollment of 36 students.

Jerry Christensen, dean of the Optometry School, said he is happy about the success of the school. "The only problem," Christensen said, "is we don't have all the lab equipment." Due to lack of equipment, many labs have been set up. Students are required to take six courses this semester, totaling 25 hours, 15 of which are lectures and 10 labs. Unlike other students, optometric majors don't get a choice of courses to take.

The first year is essentially a review of the basic sciences. During the second year, eye examination procedures are taught. The last two years consist of about 60-70 percent clinical training along with the regular UMSL classes.

Christensen hopes in the future to have a clinic at Marillac School, a Doctor of Optometry program, a Doctor of Ocular Anatomy, and clinical training along with the College of Arts and Sciences.

Currently there are three full-time and four part-time faculty members. William Long is professor of neuro-anatomy, David David­son, assistant dean at the University of Alabama at Birmingham, has been asked to fill the position of associate dean which Christensen hopes will be finalized by Jan. 1.

The 36 students, 22 from Missouri and 14 from around the country, began with orientation on Aug. 22. The day-long program introduced the curriculum and featured speakers from the American Optometric Association and the Missouri Optometric Association.

Enrollment was slowed by the lateness of the approval by the University of Missouri Board of Curators, which came in late spring. Christensen is hoping for a possible enrollment of 40 next year.

Christensen acknowledged that there are eight females in the school, which he said is unusual for a professional school.

"I think it's coming right along," said Jan Mirowitz, one of the twins. "Everyone is working hard to make it a success. It's exciting to be in the first year of classes."

The students have begun an organization called the American Optometric Student Association. They will send representatives to the AOA and also use it as a way of getting to know each other through parties.

Todd Lucas serves as treasurer.

Christensen moved on August 21 from a temporary office in Woods Hall to his permanent office at 133 Marillac. Christensen spent the summer organizing the school in a corner of the Extension office.

The first year of the school requires that bylaws be discussed at a different meeting than that at which they are introduced.

Other committee members disagreed with Sanders. "A majority rules in most instances," said Wines, "and I think that a majority of the members would like to get the bylaws out of the way." The committee passed the motion 6-2, with Sanders and Dan Crane, Student Association vice president, voting against it.

The main source of student financial aid is funded through the federal government. University figures show federal aid during 1978-79 as being 51.4 percent of the total award. 1980-81 figures show the amount of federal rising to 67.6 percent.

The university accounted for 45.3 percent of the funds in 1978-79, compared to 28.8 percent for 1980-81.

Support provided by the state has remained at approximately three percent since 1978.

The next Board of Curators meeting will be held Oct. 16-17 in Columbia.

request by the university of $885,000 for optometry facilities. A request for $300,000 for the renovation of various research and teaching lab buildings was denied, according to university officials. Appropriations for energy conservation at UMSL was also denied.

A direct aid award summary sheet was also released at the meeting. Figures list total direct aid awarded for 1978-79 over $37 million and more than $47 million for 1979-80. Projected figures for the 1980-81 school year are set at over $60 million.

Broken tubes can send a TV junkie down the tubes

"Bang! Oh my God, bang the hell out of your front door!"

"Somebody do something. We're losing 'Laverne and Shirley!""

"Our father, who art in CBA, hallowed be thy affiliates. . . ."

"It's probably the plug. Check the connections in the cord. Good grief, what if the set is BROKEN?"

A deadly pause.

"Sir, I am a representative of St. Louis TV," said the stenographer, Fred Silverman!!!

It was one of those things you think can never happen to you.

The evening had begun normal enough: TV was on, the lights were off, the living room was darkly quiet, and the scent of freshly baked cornbread filled the air as the family gathered around the set singing the "Love Boat" theme. But all had gone well for several hours.

Mom, Pop, Mary Lou, and Jim Bob lay prone before the living room ey. With every passing minute, the symptoms of television withdrawal set in. Signs of the "manic depression" originating in the brain. Signs like the inability to concentrate, the hallucinations of colors, and the delusions of hearing voices. All of these symptoms were indicative of the disease known as TV addiction.

"Somebody dial 911!" screamed with a face as white as a sheet. "This is an emergency!"

"Praise William Paley, from whom all blessings flow," said the announcer, "and from whom all blessings flow as well."

"You Are Addicted to Television When You:"

1. Postpone your wedding until you can get more commercials.
2. Consume more than three quarts of chips per sitting.
3. Hijack a Kleenex truck, to hijack a Kleenex truck.
4. Attack a salesman who had the gall to turn off "The Price Is Right" screen at the Bronzeville.

"How then, you may ask, can these reactions be avoided?"

What are the early symptoms of TV addiction to television viewing? Well, you dragged it out, you dragged it out!"

"Yes, Bob, that's what it was. We've got working with us now are the people who have signed up to be volunteers. We've got a paper that will give us the names. A lot of the people who sign up to be volunteers will keep Reagan out? coordinator. There are other people who think you should vote for who you believe that people should get out and vote.

"We're mlssmg 'Laverne and Shirley -- or is it 'Laverne and George?'"

"Take the living room to the back of the set and fiddle with the tubes. Mary Lou, put a towel over your hair, and Jim Bob do something sensible."

"Yes, we've got a plan. We've got a plan to keep Reagan out of the White House."

"And then, it happened. With the final commercial break some­ time to reserve space in the basement for a future, you may ask, how do we keep the tube from breaking?"

1. Postpone your wedding until you can get more commercials.
2. Consume more than three quarts of chips per sitting.
3. Hijack a Kleenex truck, to hijack a Kleenex truck.
4. Attack a salesman who had the gall to turn off "The Price Is Right" screen at the Bronzeville.

"We've set up tables at such things as the Ice Cream Festival and the Kirkwood Gazebo dealer."

"But we have to realize that we have to use any opportunity to gain exposure for our candidate and that he would be good as a President.

"Now it looks like it's going to be a take-over. Now we have a shot at winning the presidency of the United States, a lot of a long-shot."

"Wouldn't it be great if we could raise funds on campus, but I perceive UMSL to be a rather conservative campus."

"It's a great organization, a great organ­ ization. We meet every week and talk about their plans for the fall."

"We're trying to get people to vote. We hope you vote for our candidate, but even if you don't, please, go to the polls and express your opinion. For example, we've had a lot of Reagan supporters come to our table and we disagree with them on a lot of philosophical things on what the two administrations would be, but I think that one thing we agree with them on is that people should get out and vote.

"We've been trying to get this thing together for a while, trying to get Anderson support­ ers on campus together."

"We're waiting until the petition drive is finished. We just want to make sure that we had a man. We did that. It was a huge success, as you know, and since then we've been working to keep that fire going. It would be great if we could raise funds on campus, but I perceive UMSL to be a rather conservative campus."

"Yes, we've got a plan. We've got a plan to keep Reagan out of the White House."

"You: [as Erma Bombeck]."

UMSL cop has busy day on campus beat

Frank Clements

The time is about 1:00pm, and you're rushing out to your car for the trip home. You hop behind the wheel and a chill comes over you; there is something fluttering in the breeze right in from your bright and pink UMSL traffic ticket. Yes, the UMSL Police Department is at it again, and you head for Woods Hall to grindingly pay the three-dollar fine.

This scenario has happened to most UMSL students at one time or another, and in all likelihood, they have thought to themselves, "Is this all those jerks do?"

The Current put that question to UMSL Police Chief James J. Nelson.

"We're just like any other police force, whether it be St. Louis, Bel Nor, Normandy, or any place else. We have the officers, which includes four rounds on Monday of this week. We're commissioned through UMSL training. Some of them come to us and work in service training. For a real look at what an officer has to do," Nelson said. "I can take about 15 to 20 minutes to get a report, and the next day that car will be parked in the wrong area. Even when "city bullies" learned to play the mandolin faster and flashier than he did, Monroe remained the absolute source. City bullies had to innovate because they lacked authenticity. At first, it was called "progressive bluegrass." Later, it was called other names like "newgrass" and "hillbilly jazz." They played too loose and too fast, however. Their innovations were more like groupings of jazz and swing onto the face of bluegrass.

Solomon Volkov, the noted Russian musicologist, will lecture on "Shostakovich and Dostoevski" on the University of Missouri-St. Louis campus in the J.C. Penney Auditorium on August 24, 1980. This is the first in the six-part Humanities Lecture Series sponsored by the College of Arts and sciences.

Volkov was born in the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic in 1930. He came to the United States in 1971 and has been a faculty member at the University of California, Santa Barbara since 1968. His research interests include the history of Russian music, Russian literature and art, and the history of music in the Soviet Union. He is the author of several books on Russian music, including "Russian Music and Its History," which was published in 1976. His most recent book, "The Nemesis of Shostakovich," was published in 1986. Volkov is known for his expertise in the music of Sergei Rachmaninoff, and he has written extensively about his life and works. His research has been published in numerous articles and books. Volkov is also a frequent speaker at music conferences and events. University Center Information Desk.

Gosman accepts position at UMSL

Internationally acclaimed violinist and conductor Lazar Gosman has accepted the position of artist-in-residence at the University of Missouri-St. Louis. The announcement was made jointly by Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman and Leonard Ott, Chairman of the Department of Music.

Gosman’s initial recital as artist from his new post will be a program of works by Dmitri Shostakovich on Thursday, September 25 in the C. P. Lyon Auditorium on the UMSL campus, at 8pm. Gosman originally performed the works on the program under the tutelage of Shostakovich while living in Russia.

Gosman will be joined by Natasha Karban, second violin; Seyvah Schuster, cello; and Thomas Dunn, viola, for a performance of Shostakovich’s Quartet No. 8, Opus 110. During the second part of the program, they will perform Shostakovich’s Quintet, Opus 57, with George Shlomowitz, harp. The concert will be accompanied by Russian musicologist and critic Solomon Volkov.

The public is invited to attend Gosman’s initial recital. There is no charge for this performance.

Kullman Chamber Orchestra, now in residence at the UMSL, will be named after the internationally renowned Linenhardt Chamber Orchestra. He was also a teacher at the Leningrad Conservatory. During his life in Russia, he performed with Shostakovich, as well as with other prominent Russian artists and conductors including Matlin Rostropovich and David Oistrakh.

He has recorded extensively with many chamber orchestras, and was known nationally for his unique approach to chamber music, both in St. Louis, and in New York where he is music director of the Manhattan orchestra at Carnegie Hall and conductor of the Soviet Ensemble. The public is invited to attend Gosman’s initial recital. There is no charge for this performance.

Red One, not so big

When a B-movie director is given an A-movie budget, it is difficult to score higher than a B-. But with "The Big Red One," Samuel Fuller gets a lot right.

The film stars Lee Marvin as a tough Infantry Sergeant who is in the process of fighting his second World War. The foremost members of his squad are played by Robert Carradine, Mark Hamill, Bob DeCicco, and Kelly Ward. Their adventures are detailed from the start of their war career to the end-day mop-up operations. Marvin is perfectly cast as the sergeant. He has had no good role in several years, and his performance here could possibly mark a come- back for Marvin as he has very little acting to do. He describes the character every time he squints through his sagging, deeply wrinkled face. It helps that virtually the same role has been seen in films a thousand times before, not infrequently in the person of Lee Marvin.

The best thing about the secondary stars is their youth. It is about time a WWII movie recognizes that wars are fought by very young men and not middle-aged movie stars. Carradine plays a cigar-smoking mystery writer who narrates the film, and Hamill is a "sensitive" cartoonist who freezes up in battle. But DeCicco turns in a performance that stands out.

Samuel Fuller directs with all the subtlety of an amphibious assault. As his script is loaded with allusions to the Vietnam War, the film feels sufficient, and throws it onto the screen without wasting time to think things through.

Sometimes this technique is very successful. Often, it is not. Among the better moments is an early scene depicting the alliance of French with American forces. The scene is designed to show the German sniper in a Sicilian village. Other reminiscent scenes are still not particularly painful or, both. Fuller injects symbolism at every opportunity, but it is cheap and unnecessary. One cannot help feeling that when an insane asylum inmate joins in a fierce gun battle, it does not seem necessary for the audience to be left to guess whether the gun is "sane!" Fuller seems scared to death that we’ll laugh at the scene.

The bulk of Fuller’s career consists of low-budget "50s melodramas ("Fixed Bayonets," "Vera缫Kovitch was Robert DeNiro and Meryl Streep. THE WRONG MAN in the middle of the Vietnam War are characters that makes a powerful statement by simply not worth caring bought him a career. John Gavin, with Janet Leigh embezzling $40,000 and getting him in the shower. Anthony Perkins is twitching, wide-eyed! Norman Bates, the joke role that bought him a career. Where are you, you smug little Russian?, asks the Nazi to the Jewish character in the middle of a scene in "Red One." The man is twiching, wrinkled face. The locations are also well-chosen, even accomplishes the difficult task of depicting even the movement of those early melodramas. In its present solidity of those early melodramas. In its present form, it would have been one beautiful movie.

Soldiers play dead to initiate an ambush, for even who the enemy is, and the lack of sometimes redundant and inconsistent. How, for example, can he tell us what the enemy is saying before its possibilities are exploited. Fuller is so solidly mounted, the thrills; and the jungle-gym indistinguishable exactly what is happening or even accomplishes the difficult task of depicting while a veddy British police inspector adds two.

Kurosawa’s "Seven Samurai" is twiching, getting silly. The shocks are mild by today’s standards, while a veddy British police inspector adds two.

Black history artifacts coming to UMSL

Generations of Black St. Louisans have made significant contributions to the history of St. Louis. Now their stories, struggles, and achievements will be kept alive for future generations in a collection of materials at the University of Missouri-St. Louis.

Researchers Ina Neal Watson and Isaac Darden are working on a Black History Project with the purpose of gathering historical source materials concerning the roles, life-styles and purpose of gathering historical information on Howard B. Cox. The year-long project began last February, funded by grants and has worked in news reporting and production at WTL in Jacksonville, Florida, and WKZO Radio and Television.

The team of researchers already has uncovered more than 56 fascinating stories which have been illustrated in a slide presentation available for showing to organizations and classes. Highlights from the slide show include information on Jean Baptiste DeSable, an 18th century owner of a St. Louis fur trading business, who later founded the city of Chicago in 1772.

Another prominent figure was Annie Turnbo Malone, who came to St. Louis from Illinois, with her product called "Wonderful Hair Grower." Malone and her three assistants sold the product door-to-door, giving free scalp treatments to attract clients. By 1918, her product was internationally known and she opened the half-million dollar Poro College, which housed a production facility, classrooms, a restaurant and business offices. Malone is recognized in the 1976 Guinness Book of Records as the earliest self-made millionaire.

Another eminent personality was James Milton Turner, a founder of Lincoln University, and one of St. Louis' most articulate Black political leaders of the 19th century. In 1865, Turner organized the Missouri Equal Rights League, the first political organization seeking to achieve voting rights for Blacks after the Civil War.

Also included in the project is information on Howard B. Woods (1917-1976), founder of the St. Louis Southside, Woods was a member of the University of Missouri and president of the Urban League of St. Louis. The modern administration building on the UMSL campus, Woods Hall, was named in his honor.

An important addition to the project was the membership books of the Amazurian Club, a cultural organization founded in 1880 and comprised of professional Black men. This prestigious club provided opportunities to discuss current issues and to hear guest speakers such as W.E.B. DuBois.

When completed, the project will be located in the UMSL Library and open to the public.

The collected material also includes information on "Cool Papa" Bell, said by some observers to be the fastest man ever to play baseball, and Jessie Housey Holliman, whose mural in the York Rite Masonic Temple, is one of the few true frescos to exist in Missouri.

The researchers will continue to seek out additional information in the months to come. They are requesting that persons having documents, thoughts, pictures and other materials contact them so these materials can be preserved and passed on to future generations. The researchers may be contacted at UMSL 50-5147.

For checking the lots, Cox then takes the money from the daily parking lot to the cashiers office. Cox returns the receipts to the police station and then heads back on out on his beat. His next stop is the library.

"The library has to be checked to see if anything unusual is happening, especially on the fifth floor, because there are less library personnel on that floor. We've even had stalkers up there. Most of the time it's quiet, though, because most of the students are asleep," said Cox.

"I guess they really should call it 'the multi-purpose building' instead of the library." After finding the "multi-pur- pose building" clear, Cox then checks the Student Center, and the offices upstairs.

It is now 11am and Cox is half-way through his day. For the rest of the shift, he'll repeat the routine he has done this morning, and try to get in a bite of lunch "on the run."

Rivermen come from behind to nip EIU, 2-1

Rick Capelli

UMSL's Dan Muesenfechter fired home a Mike Bess pass with eight minutes and 32 seconds remaining to spark the soccer Rivermen to a 2-1 victory over powerful Eastern Illinois last Saturday afternoon.

The Panthers had jumped out to a 1-0 lead in the first half as EIU forwards Silvano Corazza and Damien Kelly crossed up UMSL defenders with a goal at the 34:07 mark. To make matters worse, the Rivermen refused to quit. "I think the team showed a lot of character Saturday," he said. "I felt I had let them down after missing that penalty. But everybody stayed confident. We knew it wasn't going to be like the St. Louis U. game. We knew we could come back."

And come back they did. After just three minutes and 39 seconds of the second half, junior winger Pat McVey took a pass down the middle and blasted a bullet past Hartman for the equalizer.

The game then see-sawed back and forth with the Panthers unable to put the ball past Ed Wells, who played an exceptional game in goal for the Rivermen.

"Eddie was in complete control back there," said UMSL head coach Don Dallas. "The goal they scored in the first half was just a good goal by a good team and he didn't have a chance on it."

With Wells keeping the Panthers at bay it was up to the UMSL frontliners to produce the game-winner. Just before the decisive goal, Muesenfechter "collided with the Panther goalie Hartman as both loped in the air to attempt to gain control of a cross by UMSL back Tom Obemak. Hartman managed to knock the ball out of danger but unfortunately, Mike Bess fed the ball right back in to Muesenfechter and the UMSL senior did the rest. Hartman incidentally suffered a separated shoulder on the play, but was able to finish the game."

That the UMSL-EIU matchup was declared the Pepsi-Cola Midwest game of the week was a little surprise to soccer fans. An intense rivalry has been built up between the two schools over the past few years, made even more interesting by the fact that UMSL is almost strictly St. Louis area talent, while the Panthers are dominated by foreign imports.

"It was a big win for us," said Dallas. "EIU is a very good team but the most important thing was the comeback. We were down early and didn't fold."

Pat McVey, who, according to Dallas, was "all over the field," received the most valuable player award for the game. But according to Dallas and all the players, the game was a team effort. Muesenfechter probably put it best.

"The whole team, defensively and offensively, is playing better this year," he said. "Everyone has a great attitude and understanding of what they are supposed to do."

RIVERMEN NOTES: The Rivermen evened their series record with EIU at 4-4-2... the Panthers outshot UMSL 10-9 but trailed in corner kicks 8-6... the Rivermen will embark on a road trip to Colorado this weekend for games Saturday and Sunday with Colorado College and the Air Force Academy.

Women deal with problems in UMSL athletic program

Until recently, women's athletics was something no one (with the exception of the parties directly involved) bothered to wink an eyelash at. Then, along came Title IX and the cries of the women were finally being heard.

Women athletes still do not receive the same financial advantage as their male counterparts, which is the aim of Title IX. But it should be pointed out that, in the past few years, women's athletics have made tremendous strides toward improvement. UMSL's program is no exception.

Under the direction of Judy Berres, UMSL has increased its number of female sports from four in 1974 to the present six. Improvements have been made in almost every aspect of the women's athletic program, but like any other university, Berres and her colleagues must deal with a major problem—lack of money.

Women's athletics at UMSL receives a total budget of $50,000 a year, which averages to below average on the financial totem pole of various colleges and universities across the land. Each sport receives $5,000 per semester in scholarship money and each coach can divide this sum any way he or she sees fit. For example, must give 12 partial scholarships, but some can distribute two full and eight partial or three full and six partial, etc.

According to Berres, UMSL has to utilize other assets besides money when it recruits prospective student-athletes, because UMSL's scholarships do not stack up to those of most major colleges.

"My main concern when we recruit an athlete is that they get their degree," she said. "I would like to see an athlete choose a school for its academics and not just for money."

Unfortunately for UMSL, many women athletes have shied away from this campus because of many unattractive factors, such as the absence of dormitories, lack of social life, and an incomplete academic curriculum. Not only have these liabilities affected the decisions of the prospects, but of the athletes who have originally signed with UMSL.

"We've lost a lot of women athletes over the years who were here for a few years and then decided to go somewhere else," explained Berres.

Berres would like to see the rule apply to women, but rather than harp on the problems, she is more concerned with keeping positive thoughts. "We need to look internally at where we are in our program and what we can do to improve it," she said. "We just have to work with what we have."

How can UMSL improve its women's athletic program? Berres believes the most important thing to do is to start promoting it.

"We have to reach out to the public and make ourselves visible," explained Berres. "We have to sell our program."

If UMSL can sell, someone is sure to buy. Last year, for example, the women's basketball team hosted a Thanksgiving tourney and a huge throng turned up to witness the event. Also, UMSL's social activities have been recognized as one of the best in the Midwest.

"A lot of people have shown an interest in our tournaments," said Berres. "We're making ourselves known to other schools and if we can keep doing this, I think we're heading in the right direction."

Velten resigns as UMSL intramural director

Mike Hempen

After four years as director of UMSL's Intramural program, Jim Velten announced his resignation, Sept. 4. His last day as director was yesterday. Thus, the intramural program will begin a new era today under the leadership of an interim coordinator. As of Sunday night, the position had not been filled, but, according to Velten, assistant director Mary Chapell is the leading candidate.

Velten resigned in order to take a position in the recreation department at McDonnell-Doug.

"Basically because I got a job where there is more money and more opportunity," he said. But the former coordinator said this was not a spur-of-the-moment decision on his part. "I've been looking for the right position for a year and a half to two years," he said. "There is no question that I enjoyed the university and the kids I worked with up there, but you reach a point in your life where, for your family, you have to make a decision to move on." He will begin his new job today.

Velten said he was pleased with the interest shown in two activities already under way - Touch Football and Tennis.

"Football is up three teams from last year, so that's good," he said. He was referring to the Men's league, where the teams have increased from eight last year to 11 this year. Also, for the first time there were teams that signed up for the Women's league. Three of them. Last year, nary a team showed interest in female football. And, to add icing to the cake, a good team signed up. Unfortunately, this team was turned away because good competition doesn't exist.

"A minor adjustment was made to the tennis format. The singles competition was moved from the fall to the spring, thereby leaving only doubles competition for the fall. Velten estimated that about 20 teams had signed up for the Men's and Women's Doubles Tournament. "We had a feeling we were beating teams within the ground, that's why we thought we would try something different," he said.

Velten also had high expectations for Whitewater Kayaking and the nine-man Soccer Tournament. Both of these are new this year.

We're hoping that's going to be real good," Velten said of Whitewater Kayaking. "The Student Affairs gave us money to purchase two Kayaks for the university this year. Ultimately, we will probably be able to loan them out in the spring for people to use." The date for the event has not yet been set.

As for the nine-man Soccer Tournament, which is actually a league, Velten said, "I think sooner or later we're going to have pretty good intramural soccer program." But he pointed out that, because this is new, it will take time to catch on. He isn't expecting any miracles this year, but he is hoping that in future years the event will grow considerably.

When Velten was asked to give an evaluation on how the program had done while he was in control, he said he was fairly pleased. He said the number of participants has tripled since he took over, but he said not to expect much of an increased in the future.

"You reach a saturation level where it becomes difficult in terms of time, space, and number of students who are willing to participate," he said. "you always strive to increase your participants, but I wouldn't look for a big jump anymore because the typical percentage of participation at a commuter college is between 10 and 15 percent, and that's right where we are right now.

Velten pointed out that intramurals offers more than fitness. It also offers socialization.

"It gives kids a chance to socialize," he said. "There are a lot of kids who don't know anybody prior to participating in intramurals. Fitness and socialization are one-two and I am not sure which one is first."

Whatever the future may hold for the UMSL Intramural program, it is hoped that the new coordinator does as thorough a job as Jim Velten did.

UML forms student boosters

Jeff Kuchmo

In the past, lack of spirit has often been associated with UMSL athletics.

This year, however, several supporters of the UMSL athletic program hope all that will change. The reason for such high hopes is the formation of the UMSL Student Booster Club.

The Booster Club, which is a branch of Southwestern Life Insurance agent Tim Watkins is hoping to bring combined participation from UMSL's student organizations in order to create a higher level of student interest in UMSL athletics.

The fraternities and sororities on campus have already taken an active role in the club. According to Watkins, though, the new organization is not attempting to demean the importance of the greek system.

Harriers

was the presence of three freshmen in his starting lineup. He is pleased with Jim Arnold, Nick Mortensen and Linda Tate (right-hand woman), Frethoff, but the trailing threesome are at least one year away from competing with the top-notch collegiate runners.

What has really hurt the Cross Country Program, though, according to Neal, is the absence of a track team.

"The primary trouble is that we don't have a track," said Neal, "so, we have trouble recruiting.

Without successful recruiting sooner or later, it's difficult to win. UMSL's early season performances are evidence of that."

In exchange for these privileges, the boosters are asked to contribute a membership fee, tentatively set at five dollars. Velten and The Booster Club's activities will be announced in the future.

Even though the club is in its developmental stage, Watkins is confident it will be a success.

"The way it looks, UMSL is going to field some strong teams this year, and I'm thinking it's the best time to generate student interest," he said.

"We want to get a lot of people coming to the sports events," added Watkins. "The administration isn't going to allocate funds to improve the program unless the students show an interest in UMSL sports. The only way to improve UMSL sports is by student participation."

TKE's capture opener, 18-2

Tas Kappa Epsilon, the defending intramural football champions, began their season in fine fashion by outslugging Sigma Pi, 18-2.

Sigma Pi struck first as TKE's junior quarterback Dennis Carey was tackled in the end zone for a safety, and a 2-0 lead. But that was about all the Sig PIs could muster as Carey, who passed for all three TKE scores, hit wide receiver Joel Bennett for a touchdown and a 6-2 lead. Carey then went on to head the Sig PIs offense gave up five quarterback sacks and three interceptions.
