Assembly critical of aid cuts

Cheryl Keatley

The UMSL Student Assembly passed a motion Sunday condemning President Ronald Reagan's proposal to cut student financial aid. "If allowed to be passed," the motion stated, "and signed into law, this will mark the return of the days when only the privileged and wealthy few can afford to send their children to college."

"We also urge Senators Eagleton and Danforth, Congressmen Clay, House to continue to provide financial aid." Student groups at UMSL, Washington University and Southern Illinois University-EEdwardsville have approved similar motions.

In opposition to the motion, Student Assembly Secretary Pat Kinamore suggested that students could live at home and obtain part-time jobs rather than draw upon student loans to pay for rent and other expenses. Assembly member Rodney Woods responded to Kinamore's statement by saying that the student he represents, "use and need financial aid."

Another member replied that as a returning student, she did not have the option of living at home with her parents. She said that her aid goes toward paying incidental fees and not "rent."

"Student financial aid is a very good investment," said Sandy MacLean, dean of Student Affairs. He cited higher education cuts and stressed that the savings are going to try to make the police department more visible on campus.

ENFORCER: New Police Chief William Hickman, to further discuss the CIP. The committee also discussed the status of state funding for the School of Optometry.

Karabas settles in as chief

Renee Krioplemann

The newly-appointed Chief of Police at UMSL, William Karabas, has said his main concern is stressing crime prevention techniques on campus.

Karabas, who has served for 14 years as police chief at St. Louis Community College at Forest Park, plans to introduce several awareness programs to encourage a common sense approach to guarding valuables.

Publication of bulletins and bookmarkers will be provided as reminders to students and faculty to watch their valuables. The chief would also like to appoint a "crime prevention officer" to work with students and faculty to help eliminate crime.

Karabas also wants to provide an anti-auto theft windshield etching that will be free of charge. This service will chemically engrave a serial number on the windshield of a car so it can be easily claimed if stolen.

Writing and editing skills subject of seminar

UMSL has scheduled several seminars and workshops during April for people interested in developing writing and editing skills. Classes will be held in the J.C. Penney Building.

An editing seminar will be offered Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 6:30-8:30pm, April 13 through 29. The workshop is designed to present fundamentals of editing to persons who are entering the field, or persons who work with an editorial or communications department and need to know more about terminology and production. The registration fee for the workshop is $94.

A refresher course on modern grammar, usage, and punctuation will also be offered Tuesdays and Thursdays, April 13 through 29, from 7-9pm on the UMSL campus. The course will be taught by Nan Sweet and the registration fee is $55.

Effective business writing will be the topic for another seminar scheduled Tuesday and Thursday, from 6:30-9:30pm, April 20 through 29. The workshop, led by Dan Smith, is designed to advance skills in business writing in a small class and in written documentation. Writing effective letters, reports, and memoranda will be stressed. The registration fee is $85.

Additional information about these courses can be obtained by calling 553-5961.

Applications being taken

Student Affairs is now accepting applications for two positions: UMSL Emmisaries and Orientation Student Assistants. Applications for the positions can be obtained in the office of Student Affairs, 301 Woods Hall.

UMSL Emmisaries is a public relations and service program sponsored by Student Affairs. This volunteer group of students conducts campus tours for prospective students, visiting business and community leaders and legislators. In addition, Emmisaries participate in community sponsored events such as the Chancellors' Report to the Community, New Student Orientation, Parents' Orientation and various award presentations.

The student assistants participate in the summer pre-registration and orientation program for new students. The assistants lead small group orientation activities and conduct campus tours. Assistants will be paid about $250 for their services. The summer program begins June 14 and lasts until July 8.

Historical papers donated

A pioneer in the fluoridation of St. Louis water has donated his papers to the Western Historical Manuscript Collection at UMSL. Ralph Rosens, a retired St. Louis dentist, has given to the university documents covering more than 30 years. Dr. Rosen was editor of the Bulletin of the St. Louis Dental Society during the 1950s, the turbulent decade during which fluoridation was approved by both St. Louis and St. Louis County governments. The papers include correspondence, reports, and newspaper articles from the local campaign as well as pro- and anti-fluoridation literature from around the country.

Flouridation came to St. Louis in 1955, and the county began fluoridating its water in 1963, two years after the Missouri Supreme Court upheld the county's fluoridation ordinance. Rosens said he "just hated to throw things away," thereby accumulating some valuable primary source material. Anne Kenney, associate director of the Western Historical Manuscript Collection, said Rosen was a good organizer, and noted that he kept carbon copies of his letters, an important bridge in the documentation. Kenney said the Rosen papers are a valuable addition to their collections that document social reform in St. Louis.

The Western Historical Manuscript Collection-St. Louis is part of the Joint Collection of the University of Missouri and the State Historical Society. Divisions are located on all four campuses of the university. The collection contains primary source materials for research in many fields and is open to scholars, students, and the public. The collection is located on the second floor of the Thomas Jefferson Library on the UMSL campus, 8001 Natural Bridge Road.

In other action, the Assembly elected Roland Letterin as Communications Chairperson.

From page 1 the only politician to respond to questions from the chancellor, the Assembly went into executive session to hold what Students Association President Larry Grobman said that money cannot be saved by reducing programs but by reducing the number of people employed. He acknowledged that UMSL has already lost some quality faculty, but added that cost reductions would probably reach only half the original projections.

In response to questions about program reductions, Grobman said that money cannot be saved by reducing programs but by reducing the number of people employed.

Passed by voters in 1980, limits the growth of state revenue to the rate of growth of personal income. If the state were to raise taxes, any additional revenue would have to be returned through income tax refunds. Some members of the state legislature have said that unless the Hancock Amendment is revied, the state is going to have to run at a deficit to meet its financial needs.

New UMSL group to protest Reagan's El Salvadorian policy

Barb DePalma

A new organization is being formed at UMSL to protest President Ronald Reagan's policy of military intervention in Central America.

Although the organization has no official members, Mary Bewig, student organizer, plans to set up an information table on campus to let students who are forming a group that deals with this issue.

"Having a physical presence on campus is the best way to let people know we are in existence," Bewig said. "From talking to people, I get the general feeling that the American people are against his (Reagan's) stand. They need someone to step forward and express this feeling."

The group will work in conjunction with the Latin American Solidarity Committee (LASC) in St. Louis. The committee has already been planned by LASC to protest U.S. military intervention in El Salvador.

On March 26 at 11 p.m in Clark Hall, two members of the organization will speak to the Marxist Heritage class. Another protest is being held simultaneously in Washington D.C. The protests are being held to voice concern over the elections being held in El Salvador on that day.

"We are protesting the unfairness of the elections," Bewig said, "because one-half of the population in El Salvador is out of the country and also protesting against the right-wing dictatorship and prejudice in the region."

"El Salvador could become another Vietnam," Bewig said. "People are against American involvement in Central America and Central America. The organization on campus would mobilize in St. Louis and in El Salvador."

For more information, call Mary Bewig at 849-0185.

Goode's proposal would have limited the growth of state appropriations to the rate of growth in personal income. In addition, the bill would have made it unnecessary to refund increased revenue if it exceeded the Hancock Amendment limit.

Some members of the senate committee said they were prepared to change the Hancock Amendment so soon after passage by the voters.

Day of Concern II

Large turnout needed for rap session

The University of Missouri Board of Curators will hold a rap session today with faculty, staff and students in 222 J.C. Penney at 3pm. A good showing by UMSL students is essential.

Students who planned the March 5 rally and those who attended it, would agree that this rap session could not have come at a better time.

The Day of Concern was a start. Students voiced their concerns before the Missouri legislators. But the politicians are not the only ones to speak out. They could not answer all our questions. We, as students, could only make them aware of the university's situation.

"There really isn't anything the elected official can do," Lt. Gov. Kenneth J. Rothman stated at the rally. "If you have complaints about your campus, talk to your curators."

Now students must do just that.

Problems with the university must be handled through internal channels. The curators can provide us with the answers that our legislators could not. They are there to be responsive to the needs of the university and act in its best interest. They can act upon our concerns.

This rap session can work to our advantage, but we must present ourselves as a concerned and knowledgeable student body. Students with questions and concerns can speak out today.

As many students as possible must turn out for the session at 3pm. We need the students to tell us the support that numbers achieved at the rally. The 1500 students in attendance at the Day of Concern was our biggest advantage. We must move as a unified group once again.

Speak out and be heard. Be there.

Campus gets positive vote

Chancellor Arnold B. Grobman has received his vote of confidence.

A vote of the UMSL full-time regular faculty tallied earlier this week showed that 44 percent of the faculty gave the chancellor its support. Although the percentage was not extremely high, the results can be viewed as favorable.

The chancellor's vote of confidence not only put him in a better light but was also in the best interest of the university. The university needed this positive vote of confidence by the faculty in order to get back on its feet again. The university's public image suffered as much as that of the chancellor.

This campus has experienced a great deal of turmoil and unrest in such a relative- ly short span of time. Cuts were being made at what seemed a minute's notice. A state of panic set in at the university and no one knew who to believe or turn to. The ultimate blame was placed on the chancellor.

Communication was a major factor and this break in, or lack of, communication led to the faculty's call for the chancellor's resignation. This however, would not have solved our budget problem. His resignation would only have weakened the university more and left it that much more vulnerable.

Dear Editor:

The cross-country team is very invited with the very proposal from the Athletic Committee to Chancellor Grobman to cut the cross country team. We disagree with the facts this committee has said to Grobman about the cross country team which state that "in the past two years the UMSL cross country team has not fielded a full team." This is misleading. We did have a team at the MIAA Cross Country Conference Championship and at the CAA Division Two South Central Regional. I think they should have checked the facts first.

Awhile back there was an article in the Current about the cross country team written by one former runner. It didn't need a big budget and it was one of the lowest cost sports.

Let's look at all the sports that cross country is primarily sponsored by the other MIAA. The cross country team this would be reduced to one since the other teams would have one less team in their conference. This team this would be reduced to one, the Cross Country team. In the regional at the CAA Division Two there would have one less team in the regional. In the region- al meet two teams qualified for the finals from the South Central Regional. In the region of a team this would be reduced to one team by the NCAA Division two Athletic Committee because of the large number of schools in the Northeast Regional.

Dear Editor:

I am writing in regard to Shawn Foppe’s review of “Cae­sar and Cleopatra” (“Players take a beat and perform beauty,” March 18, 1982, Cur­rent).

Firstly, it is unfortunate that the Current could find no one else but Foppe to write the review. Anyone involved with the University Players at any level should not be reviewing one of their productions. Al­though a “critic’s note” (which probably should have been an “editor’s note”) preceded the article, it did not do anything to alleviate the obvious lack of objectivity. It was clear that Foppe was prejudiced and, therefore, unqualified to write such a review.

Secondly, I question Foppe’s theatrical expertise. While I disagree with most of Foppe’s statements regarding the show, I will not concern myself with the specific differences we saw in the performance. However, I would question anyone’s theatri­cal background who feels that Lisa Patrick was “excellent” and forceful and failing” or that Gregory Alkofer “stole the hearts of the entire audience.”

Lastly, Foppe was obviously unaware that a play review is supposed to deal with the performance of the play, not the play itself. He rarely dealt with the actual acting or perfor­mance; instead, he concerns him­self with criticizing Shaw’s writing ability. I hardly think that Foppe has reached such a high level of experience that he is ready to take on Shaw. He might, however, be ready to take on the U. Players—provid­ing he was not a member of the organization.

On the whole, I would say that the review was a disgrace, and the Current should think twice before having Foppe review any U. Players production again. Even somebody who is less “familiar” with theatre than Foppe could write a much more objective and, hence, useful review.

Twenty-five students were elected to the Senate. The next meeting of the committee will be March 29 at 2pm in 411 Woods Hall.

Ten years ago the floor of the UMC admissions office began to buckle from the weight of 58 file cabinets jammed full of records. The office was so crowded with cabinets the admissions staff had little place to work. The solution? Microfilm.

"When we got finished filming their records, they were down to two aperture card size file cabinets," said Wayne Duncan, manager of UM microfilm operations. An aperture card, which contains information equivalent to 20 documents, measures 7 inches by 3 inches.

The microfilm lab, located in the University Printing Services' building on the Columbia campus, is responsible for filming all records created within the UM system. On the average, 8 million source documents and about 12 million computer output microfilms are filmed each year. The microforms available from the UM lab include spool and cartridge rolls, jackets, aperture cards and microfiche.

Survey says resume fraud uncommon in UM system

Employers of the nation's college graduates have become more aware of fraudulent credentials since last year when a Washington Post reporter confessed that the subject of her Pulitzer Prize-winning story was not true. She also admitted that she had lied about the academic credentials listed on her resume.

Deception by job applicants is becoming more widespread, according to some national reports. A survey of University of Missouri registrars and placement officials, however, indicates no significant problem at the university—as far as they are aware.

"When you read something like this, the thing you always ask yourself is are there cases occurring which you don't know about?" confesses Gary Smith, UMC director of admissions and registrar.

"There have always been isolated cases of fraudulent credentials," he says, admitting a slight increase at UMC but attributing it to a greater number of students and graduates. UMC annually processes approximately 80,000 transcript requests and 50,000 requests for certification of attendance or degree receipt.

UMKC's Leo J. Sweeney, director of admissions and registrar, attributes the apparent increase to "a deteriorating mentality" of society.

"If people would cheat on their income tax, why wouldn't they cheat on a job application? I think increasing competition for jobs and promotions puts pressure on people. They think this is an easy way out of it. I guess I am constantly surprised we don't discover more cheating. I wonder if we don't see just the tip of the iceberg."

At UMSL, the number of requests for certification of degrees has doubled over the past five years, estimates H. E. Mueller, director of admissions and registrar. He surmises the cases of fraud have increased the same amount. Mueller also admitted that Sweeney that a decline in moral attitudes has contributed to the increase in the number of cases of fraud.

"Certain there's been an increase, but it happened long before the tight job situation."

Most cases Smith has seen at UMC occur among former students who have been away from the university 10 years or more. Most discrepancy, he says, is with people who attended the university but did not earn a degree.

Thom Rakes, placement coordinator in UMC's Career Planning and Placement Center, says he finds that most companies check past work experience and references more closely than they do an academic record.

"It's up to employers to check on an applicant's qualifications, but at the same time student advisers and faculty members have a responsibility to teach students to give the 'best representation of themselves, but not a misrepresentation,'" he says.

Rakes.

Under the 1974 federal privacy act, the university cannot release student information—such as directory information without the student's written authorization. A student's signature allows the release of transcripts to employers or other institutions.

If a student makes a request for release of records in person, all four UM campuses require additional verification of identity, such as a driver's license or social security number. The university's policy is for any transcript to be directly to the student to be stamped as such. This alerts employers and other institutions that the records did not come directly from the university.

What is one of the most unlikely jobs in which you would picture an UMSL graduate with a degree in European history?

"That's right. Mayor Vincent Schoemehl graduated from UMSL in 1976 with an honors degree in European history, just a few hours short of a degree in English literature, which, Schoemehl said jokingly, "required a spectrum of skills I've never used." He originally planned on getting a degree in education, but changed his mind because of his fondness for history.

Schoemehl said he feels there was no one factor in particular that influenced his career; rather, it was "the overall learning experience. The value of spending the years of one's life between about ages 18 and 23 in an institution of higher learning where ideas, values and challenges are an accepted part of the game... is a broadening experience which you get a degree in basket weaving or brain surgery... it is an environmental maturing process. The overall experience of being a university is a very healthy and growing kind of experience."

Questioned about UMSL, and specifically its commuter campus at UMSL-Washington, Schoemehl said, "There is no major advantage in attending residential colleges as opposed to UMSL. In fact, he said commuter students "are more responsible and attentive to their study. There's more of an understanding of the pressures of the outside world. I think it's a very healthy environment. In the next decade, you will see UMSL emerge as the major educational institution in the St. Louis region."

The reason for this, Schoemehl feels, is because the St. Louis economy is undergoing a transitional stage from manufacturing to service. "A semi-skilled worker people will have to be trained to become skilled."

"That transition is going to demand the presence of a major public institution of higher learning, and that is going to be UMSL, the transitional public educator."

He feels UMSL will have to fulfill this role. Washington University and St. Louis University, while serving their purpose, are too specialized and too expensive for the role.

"The workers of the future will be people who are going to earn their living with their minds, who need to have massive amounts of public education available. This community won't survive without the significant expansion and enhancement of UMSL," Schoemehl stated.

But what about all the highly debated commercial recent budget cuts? Schoemehl said these were necessary measures.

"UMSL cannot try to be a small liberal arts college on a Natural Bridge," Schoemehl said. "It is going to be required to be a broad-based school that will service the many needs of the community. This will require spending the resources and drawing from technical skills," Schoemehl said, adding that while some professors may not like it, this is reality.

"UMSL is going to serve a vital transition and preparation function for the St. Louis economy... it can emerge as the major university in St. Louis."

— Mayor Vincent Schoemehl

"St. Louis has an enormous untapped potential... We are attacked, but we are attacked by the unknown. This community offers a substantive quality of life, and that, in the final analysis, will be what saves us."

— Mayor Vincent Schoemehl

Women's conference begins

"Women's Alliances — Theory, Practice, Potential," to be held March 25, 26 and 27 is being co-sponsored by Women's Studies, Women's Programs and Continuing Education and the Women's Center. The Bella Abzug talk is being co-sponsored by the Office of Student Life.

"One of the things we hope to achieve with this conference is to encourage more student involvement," said Cathy Burack, coordinator of the UMSL Women's Center. More faculty members and more students are involved this year in the planning.

"I don't think that the style of UMSL students will turn out yet," Burack said. "It has always been a good turnout in terms of St. Louis community people. It would be nice if we could count on students coming, too."

The conference was called a festival for the past three years, but the serious mood of the times suggested a more serious title. "What we decided at the end of last year after surveying the mood of the people, and that it was that calling it a festival seemed kind of frivolous for these times," Burack said.

"It didn't match up with the kinds of issues that were being addressed, the content of the presentations. More faculty members and more students are involved this year in the planning."

"We decided that more appropriately this was a pretty serious conference on different issues affecting women today — how women are address-
In another scene we witness (much to our dismay) another Phys-Ed instructor, Miss Balbricker, discover young men in the girl's shower room. What follows is too brutal to relate, but it is both disgusting and blatantly crude. "Porky's" is so packed full of needless raunch that even those seldom offended will be offended. I personally enjoy tasteful raunch and can even tolerate a fair degree of raunchy raunch. After sitting through "Endless Love" (more appropriately: "Endless Absurdity") and "Debbie Does Dallas" (hey, it was educational in a way) I thought that I could sit through anything, but I was sincerely tempted to walk out of "Porky's".

Many people will find "Porky's" funny, though, and this is distressing. I sympathize with those directors who strive to create a worthwhile motion picture and do not, but Bob Clark has created an intentionally bad film. He is trying to market it specifically to the "American Graffiti," "Animal House" audience, and what's unfortunate is that he may succeed. Clark manages to reinforce every obnoxious stereotype that quality filmmakers have persistently worked towards eliminating over the years. Some folks will do anything for a buck.

University Singers in concert March 28

The University Singers of UMSL will present a concert on Sunday, March 28, at 4:45pm at Christ Church Cathedral, 1210 Locust St. Admission is free.

The 40-voice choir is under the direction of Bruce Vantine, assistant professor of music at UMSL. The University Singers will sing both sacred choral and secular works, ranging from the Renaissance to the modern periods. The concert precedes the group's midwestern tour, which will include concerts in Poplar Bluff and Forest City and Fairfield Bay, Ariz.

The singers, all UMSL students, have performed frequently in the St. Louis area. Vantine has just completed his doctoral work in choral performance at the University of Illinois under Harold Becker. Vantine also studied conducting and choral composition with Paul J. Christelmann, and taught in several midwestern colleges before coming to UMSL.

Vantine also is a choral composer. One of the works on the program is his "Brothers in the Eternal Cold," a work using a varied text — the Bible, magazines and Archibald MacLeish's poems — to plead for nuclear sanity. The work was well received when it premiered in St. Louis in December.

To many photographers, black and white photos has been the deciding factor in photo proc- essing. How much more magnificent are the gorgeous color slides you have taken, no matter how many summers you have spent in a flaming glory. If you do not display a group of your best black and white photos, you are nowhere in your photo career. But Marshall Katzman has proven that color photography can be as startlingly as black and white.

In his exhibit, "Urban Abstraction," on exhibit in the Center for Metropolitan Studies, 340 University Center, Katzman has captured many bits and pieces of city through his photographs. The photos all are done in black and white, you are nowhere in your photo career. But Marshall Katzman has proven that color photography can be as startling as black and white.

"There is a contrast in the different photos. The photos all are done in black and white, some are done in color, but the color photos are not as vibrant as the black and white photos. The photos are unique enough to be appreciated for themselves alone, without being compared to each other.

Katzman has captured the subject matter of the photos is very basic, but there is so much feeling in each one. I thought that you were there at the scene just as the photographer was snapping the picture.

As I went over to pick up a current for the literature, I heard someone in the student Center, wonder how they came about—a herd of students, moving towards me en masse. I could catch snatches of their conversation as they ran by nearer: "Vita, honey, I'd march right back to that headquarters and tell you what a sight I saw of those blondes, not aquamarine!" and "Rona Barrett says that supply-side economics are going to prove the fiscal deficit that Professor Marshall punched Cindy Wilson in the mouth!"

I rushed to grab my copy of the newspaper and clear out of our way, but it was too late. Six of the larger students moved over me, successfully knocking my Back Bay, and then slammed the box to the floor and crushing my Milby Way bag. I heard them exclaim to one another, by way of apology. "Did you feel that? Must be a bubble in the floor tile."

As I struggled to my feet, another student clipped my left side, angrily snapping, "This ain't a parking zone!"

I weaved through the group. Everyone has spotted a clear path to the doors, they turned off and an instant my hopes of an obstacle-free race to the exit.

In New York a tourist guide once told me that if everyone in Manhattan came out for lunch that hour, the people waiting in line would be eight high. I was being what they are, this necessitates certain pedestrian traffic rules, so that orderly progress might be maintained in any given block. In New York these rules are implicitly understood. You shall not cross the sidewalk lane during rush hour will be cheerfully trampled to death; anyone crossing in the street lane will be glared at as fiercely as the wrath of a bag lady; and both right and left-hand turns must be signaled (no hand signals, just a head-on blink) as well as the wrath of a bag lady; and both right and left-hand turns must be signaled (no hand signals, just a head-on blind) as well. Therefore I propose that we paint lane

Would the be a better way to organize the pedestrian traffic—something that we could all carry any guns.

But really, complaining is half the fun.
The UMSL women's softball team would like to forget. St. Patricia's Day was without causing a hardship on anyone. This year may be a different story for the UMSL Riverwomen tennis team. Leading the squad through the season is third year coach Pam Steinmetz. She has been through the storm in past seasons, and is looking for blue sky in this campaign.

"Last year, we had our troubles," said Steinmetz. "We had problems because we played some of our best tennis, and I think we should have a pretty good season. I'm very optimistic." Easting Steinmetz's optimism is the fact that she has talent and experience coming back to the UMSL tennis courts. With a squad of nine players, the team has strengths in every department.

Heading up the women's attack is first singles player Linda Meyers. Meyers has risen to a top two or three players on a scholarship. We have none.

The doubles line-up includes the teams of Meyers and Geers at the top doubles post and Siegel and Fore in the second doubles slot. The third doubles team consists of Moreno and Sucher.

The women's tennis format for competition features six singles matches and three doubles matches.

Larson knows there is a lot of work ahead for his team. The first-year coach said that the hitting and pitching need to be improved. "We have to cut down our walks," he said.

Larson has switched shortstop Lori Davidson to the outfield and has placed Bouchert at short. "It's working well," he said, adding, "it gives us more speed in our outfield."

The Riverwomen will participate in the SIU-Edwardsville Tournament this weekend before returning home to face SIU-E Tuesday at 3pm.
William Woods at and then, on Saturday, will play end. The women are matched against ouriam Woods College this week—will play in five important matches in nine days. After that, they have another full in the season, playing only two home matches in week. Then the season will start up again as the Rivermen two matches in three days before the start of the MIAA tournament.

Before the Rivermen worry about the rest of the season, they will have to face a tough squad from Westminster College. "Last year the first time we played them we beat them really badly, but they turned around and beat us badly the second time we played them," said Burkhart.

The Rivermen will play West­minster twice this season, but the second time will be in the middle of April at Westminster. As it turns out, the match against Westminster will be the home opener for the Rivermen, but coach Burkhart doesn’t ex­pect a roaring crowd from a campus known for its apathy. "Tennis isn’t the best spectator sport in the world, so there really isn’t such a thing as a home court advantage. The play­ers just go out there and play until one of them wins," he said.

The only visible problem right now is that the Rivermen lack consistency. In Tuesday’s doubleheader against defending MIAA cham­pions Central Missouri State, UMSL bombed the Mules in the first game, 1-2, but then let a one-run lead slip away in the last inning of the nightcap. The Rivermen lost the second game 10-7.

Just after the match was rescheduled for Friday, April 30, one week after the other match at Wash­ington U. Rivermen net­ters hadn’t had much to do lately except prepare for the upcoming SEMO tournament this week­end. That, however, should have been enough by itself.

The SEMO Tennis Tourna­ment matches four very fine teams: UMSL, SEMO, Indiana­Evansville, and Ten­nessee-Martin. Coach Randy Burkhart said earlier that his team will be one of the least experienced around, but the Rivermen should gain valuable playing time this week­end. "All of the guys are playing very well, and no one is injured, so we’ll just have to see what happens this weekend," Burkhart said.

If the netters hadn’t had much to do lately, they soon will as they are heading into a stretch of the season where they will play in five important matches in nine days. Next week, the women have back-to-back home meets against Northeast Missouri State Univer­sity and Drury College. NEMO travels to UMSL on April 2 for a 3 pm meet and Drury faces the UMSL squad on April 3 at 1 pm.

The rest of the squad appears to be in good shape. Mike Stellern, a two-year starter who sat out last season because of academic reasons, has been tearing the cover off the ball in the early going. Stellern, whose batting average is up around the .400 mark, has been a major factor in UMSL’s present 7-5 record. Other players who have been impressive in the first few weeks include first baseman Dave Lawson, third baseman Ray Howard, shortstop Al Mares, outfielders John Windom and Joe Valent and the catching trio of Mark Hupp, John Pruitt and Scott Hyde.

The only visible problem right now is that the Rivermen lack consistency. In Tuesday’s doubleheader against defending MIAA cham­pions Central Missouri State, UMSL bombed the Mules in the first game, 1-2, but then let a one-run lead slip away in the last inning of the nightcap. The Rivermen lost the second game 10-7.

Rivermen improve season record to 7-5

The Baseball Rivermen took on the University of Missouri·Rolla last Saturday and split a double-header raising their record to 6-4. The first game the Rivermen found themselves victims of a 7-2 loss due to their team batting average of .174. "We didn't hit the ball the first game," Coach Jim Dix commented. "We left a lot of people on base."

The Rivermen had a total of 4 hits, leaving 9 runners on base. "We need to be more consistent," Dix said. "I thought we were a better club than Rolla."

Pitcher Steve Haring had the misfortune to be credited with the loss. RBI's and outfielder John Windom scored twice this game. Windom is also 12 for 12 in stolen bases, while the team has a consistent .407 batting average raising their overall team average to .276.

Rivermen Notes: The baseball Rivermen have been swinging at a .276 team clip, a reason that they are facing a 7-5 season record. Scott Hyde (above), lays into the ball as does Joe Valenti (below)

ROLLING STONE:
"PERSONAL BEST is the most penetrating, heartfelt and thrilling movie yet made about the American woman's rite of passage. Robert Towne may be the first popular artist in any art form and of any sex to picture the wild beauty of young women with the mythic gusto usually reserved for young men. The result — PERSONAL BEST — is one sweet explosion. — Michael Sragow, ROLLING STONE

THE NEW YORKER:
"PERSONAL BEST is a celebration...a great, lush romantic tune. A very smart and super-subtle movie — sensual and sexual and informative, too. PERSONAL BEST should be one of the best dating movies of all time, because it pares away all traces of self-consciousness. — Pauline Kael, THE NEW YORKER
