SATS Questions Barred by Judge

In the latest skirmish between companies that recruit students for the SAT standardized tests and the competition-for-profit companies that track test questions and sell them to schools, Fortune magazine has committed to a federal judge to get the SAT tests themselves. The judge called for the nationwide retrieval of the SAT tests and the suspension of all further testing. The judge also ordered the SAT test companies to destroy all records related to the questions and to notify all students who had taken the SAT tests in the past year.

The judge's order was a response to a lawsuit filed by 12 states, including Missouri, that alleged that the SAT test questions were being sold to schools by companies that were not authorized to do so. The judge's order was also in response to a federal investigation that revealed that the SAT test questions were being sold to schools for profit.

The judge's order was met with mixed reactions. Some educators praised the decision as a step forward in the fight against test commercialization. Others criticized the decision as a setback for students who rely on test scores to get into college.

The case is ongoing, and the future of SAT test questions is uncertain. The judge has ordered a hearing to determine whether the SAT test questions should be retrieved from the companies that sold them and whether the companies should be held liable for any harm caused by the sale of the questions.
Survey Shows Smaller Families, Larger Debts Staple Of Graduates

(CPS) - College graduates are bearing smaller families and positioning major purchases such as cars and homes because they are leaving school with large financial aid debts, according to proliminary results of a new nationwide survey of 4,400 recent graduates.

The findings confirm fears of many college experts that a growing reliance on loans over grants for the last decade and as many as 90% of class graduates are burdened because they can reasonably repay after graduation.

"We are seeing instances were economic factors are being affected by the amount of money they have to pay when they graduate," reports Deena Martin, assistant director of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators (NASSFA), who sponsored the survey.

"families, buying homes, and purchasing cars because they can't afford the added financial restraints, the survey shows."

The survey, which Martin sees the most extensive study of financial aid debt over the years, found that graduates are having the most difficult time repaying their loans because they had to borrow more to meet mounting college costs.

Single women, too, have more trouble repaying their loans because they get lower salaries - and a trend is expected to continue into the future, Martin notes.

"That's a major concern of many of us," says Earl Mitchell, executive director of the National Council of Educational Opportunity Associations and director of Educational Opportunity Programs at Marquette University.

"There is growing evidence that our mission debt is getting more and more burdensome on women because they are already so heavily in debt."

Female, minority, and low income students are the hardest hit, Martin says, and they especially borrow more to meet mounting college costs.

"Mitchell points out, "It can be shown that most poor and minority students never get out of that level of trouble because they are stuck with repaying the same amount of money while making less money.""
LUMINATING: The Thomas Jefferson Library joined the UMSL on-line push by adopting the Libraries of Information Network, according to the editor-in-chief of Catalogue Services, Thomas Rick.

LUMIN, a public access on-line catalogue service already installed on the three other UMSL campuses, finally was put into operation after years of planning. At UMSL, the system consists of seven terminals accessing the four UMSL campus libraries. Though the system is not fully developed, much of the UMSL system's library catalogue already has been adopted.

From page 1 relationship of each program to others in the university and the likelihood of achieving national or international eminence.

The total amount of resources needed to build all of the programs expected to have yet to be determined.

The following is a brief summary of the other campus programs.

LUMIN System To Aid Library Through Cost Effectiveness

Daniel A. Kimack

The Thomas Jefferson Library joined the University's push to gain on-line access this semester with the installation of the Libraries of Information Network, according to the editor-in-chief of Catalogue Services, Thomas Rick.

LUMIN, a public access on-line catalogue service already installed on the three other UMSL campuses, finally was put into operation after years of planning. At UMSL, the system consists of seven terminals accessing the four UMSL campus libraries. Though the system is not fully developed, much of the UMSL system's library catalogue already has been adopted.

The following is a brief summary of the other campus programs.

LUMIN (UMSL's) card catalogue system is now available on-line, Rick said. "Within six to eight months we project that 65 percent of materials will be on-line."

"At some point within six to 12 months the Thomas Jefferson Library will be closing its card catalogue," Rick added. "After that new materials will be put directly into the on-line system."

"The LUMIN system has been installed a few years ago but was not made available to public access."

"The UMSL system will be cost effective," Rick said, "and will offer many more types of search methods for library materials."

"The card catalogue requires a lot of manual operation," Rick said, noting that cards must periodically be updated and changed. "This saves money because the biggest expense has been the personnel expense."

"The advantage for the user is much more sophisticated search methods," Rick added, explaining that more than author, title and cataloger will be useful through LUMIN.

"You will be able to search the 18,000 data which can save months!" Rick said.

Though the UMSL system has potential to go there, at this point, there is no backup system for LUMIN. Rick said possibilities of backup may include microfiche cataloguing services.

"When you work with automated equipment it is subject to failure," Rick said. "We have to live with the fact that the system will go down."

Agrees With Barnes' Views On South Africa Seeks Involvement

Dear Editor,

The community by Dr. Barnes in South Africa contained three questions. The first "What do you think about the prospect of blacks and whites living in a South Africa with harmonious coexistence for his fellow man, and with an understanding of apartheid must was to be ended?"
The second "What can we do to help the most popular answer to the solution, and how can we do it?" The third question was "Can we do anything to help the most popular question because it is the one that will stir the heart to action."

I believe that the most popular answer to the question of what can we do to help the most popular question is to remember that the most popular question is about what can we do to help the most popular answer. The answer to the question is not about what can we do to help the most popular answer, but what can we do to help the most popular question.

I agree with Dr. Barnes' views on South Africa and seek to be involved in the efforts to end apartheid. I believe that there is more to life at the University of Missouri-St. Louis than what you find in a textbook. There is more to knowledge than what you find in a textbook.

Yours sincerely,
John G. Smith

Expo Offers Chance

Students now are in their third week of classes on campus, and the atmosphere of excitement has been ample time to become acquainted, or to react to the rigors of college life. It is time to expand for many students time, to become familiar with campus events, issues and organizations.

It is time to take advantage of student groups offering you access to courses, activities and organizations.

The Expo "Hi four on campus earlier this week were available to students. Expo never has reached its potential for student involvement. For the students to become acquainted with this university's several extracurricular activities was the focal point.

It was a shame for some of those students not to inquire about becoming involved. Student involvement within the different campus groups not only helps the students but also helps the student body to function more smoothly and to deliver the best services to students.

Many factions of student interest were represented at Expo. Indeed, there was something for everyone to take advantage of. It is this kind of diversity with which UMSL is able to handle the student body.

With the campus community which is in, it is always in a chance to break campus apathy. Apathy has been killed in the past as a result of the Expo. The Expo's goal is to encourage students to become involved in the university and the student body. involvement in the university is a way to break apathy.

Through the interests of student government, extracurricular activities, clubs, and other groups, this university can thrive not only in the classroom but also in students helping each other in the classroom.

It should be a goal of those who took UMSL to further his or her education in the same way and means in which this campus can grow in prominence and professional confidence.

Knowledge may be its own reward. But there is more to know than what you can find in a text book.

Counseling Service Offers Advice For Making New Friends at UMSL

Event name: This article was published as a service to assist students. The UMSL campus can seem very intimidating for new students or class from classic to class. Yet students say they are happy when they have their views and can look forward to sharing a story or being turned back.

While it is wise to have some approach you can and should talk, there are some reasons for you to wait for that happen. You can make the first move yourself.

Others will appreciate the fact that you have approached them and you will feel pleased that you were able to ask with your question.

What if you are asked a question? You can answer the question. You can answer with your question. You can answer with your question. You can answer with your question. You can answer with your question. You can answer with your question.

If there's one thing business students have always needed, this is it: an affordable, hands-on-oriented calculator. The Texas Instruments BA-35, the Student Business Calculator, does it all.

In built-in business functions, the Texas Instruments BA-35 is an absolute must for those students who want to combine finances, accounting and managerial functions in one compact package. "The students that use this calculator find it much easier to use, much easier to understand," says a faculty member who teaches the course.

The calculator is programmed to perform the most frequently used accounting calculations. The functions of the Texas Instruments BA-35 include bank loan amortization, financial analysis, depreciation, cash flow analysis, present and future value calculations, amortizations and future payments. Information on the BA-35 is located in the Textbook Analyst and the Business Analyst, published by Prentice Hall.

Riverrwomen Run Off Carbon Copy 3-0 Victories in Season Openers

Dan Nosse sports editor

The UMSL Riverrwomen soccer team pulled off a couple of carbon copy victories to open the season this past weekend.

Saturday afternoon the Riverrwomen traveled by bus to Carbondale, Ill., to take on the Southern Illinois Cardinals. That game was won in a scoreless tie, 0-0. Then on Sunday, the Riverrwomen took on the SIU-C (Southern Illinois University Edwardsville) Tritons by a score of 4-0. Both games featured slow moving, defensively-minded play and produced the expected score results.

The game featured UMSL's goalkeeper, Kathy Guinner, who stopped three of SIU-C's four shots on goal. Guinner's only mistake of the afternoon came at the 90:00 mark of the game when she was unable to stop a shot by SIU-C's Sarah Rieken, which netted the only goal of the game.

On Sunday the Riverrwomen met the University of Southern Illinois-Peiorte Peoria UWFPP, not exactly a tournament rival to make. However, the Peoria team decided to use the opportunity to test itself against a higher level of competition. The game was played in a scoreless tie, 0-0.

"I'm happy by the way the girls played," said coach Don Dallas. "They were able to hold off the game and control it. They played well defensively and we're back to our usual style of game, but I'm satisfied with the way we played."

Dallas said that the Riverrwomen need to work on their passing and finishing, as they only scored on one of their nine shots on goal. They were also outshot, 7-0, by Peoria.

Next week the Riverrwomen will be at Southern Illinois Edwardsville to take on the Cougars. The UWFPP team has the upper hand in the series, winning four of their last five meetings. The game is scheduled for Tuesday at 3 p.m. in Edwardsville.

The midfile in class during final day of school was able to come up with the answer to a question about the whole school's change in attitude during the semester. Now they are all in agreement that there is a need to improve the school's overall climate.

One of the most interesting things that happened this year was when the school had its first ever Homecoming dance. The students played a variety of music and performed some lively dances. The dance was a big success, and everyone had a great time.

On the last day of school, the principal announced that there would be no final exams this year. The students were overjoyed, and many of them celebrated by dancing and singing in the hallways.
