Senate Maintains Entrance Standards

by Cathy Day

All their November meeting on Tuesday, the Senate passed a resolution that the University remain with its current entrance standards.

Presently, the sum of a student's high school rank percentiles is used to determine entrance standards.

The report states that this method results in a specific range of students being admitted. However, the Committee's resolution states that general improvement in high school education requires a corresponding level of requirements.

The Senate's resolution states that the University of Missouri has made students better prepared for college.

The Senate's resolution states that the current method of entrance standards cannot be determined. However, the Committee's resolution states that the Committee is committed to maintaining the current method of entrance standards until a better method can be determined.

The Senate's resolution states that the current method of entrance standards is the best available method at this time. However, the Committee's resolution states that the Committee is committed to finding a better method of entrance standards.

The Senate's resolution states that the current method of entrance standards is the most fair and consistent method available. However, the Committee's resolution states that the Committee is committed to finding a more fair and consistent method of entrance standards.

This year, like many others, has been marked with great sporting events. The Fair-American games and the Olympics were massive displays of differing sports from cultures of different nationalities. This is in comparison to the event that we are about to recount. Several others took part in last Thursday.

No, I'm not talking about the Superbowl, or the aforementioned Malik came into the Mark Twain building on Wednesday one day with a flyer in his hand. We were editorial staff (1 won). We had lost that game, badly (15-11). Durning the course of the game, however, the other two members of our team showed up. During the break that we had between games, I told anضارl cognizant story about how my bowling team is a similar situation. After having a game, come back to practice and do not take the place for the season.

So, morale was high, and we were confident that we could do well. When the fateful night of the tournament arrived, the field was a mere half-hour away from striking the ball. There were three of the six teams that had said they would be there.

We tried to relax and tell ourselves that they would be there. We could not keep from glancing at our watches and at the clock on the wall, which curiously was ticking away, and we thought of the following.

"Final Attractions"
We left for Mark Twain, with most of our team, helped by the note on the door (of the Mathematical Department), which read something like the above. Still, morale was good, and we thought that we could do well.

We arrived at the scene of our great contest, after a brief walk from the Union. We decided to mention just a hint among the other teams we had played on our editorial stuff (1 won). We found out, once more, that we could not have our full team on the court because of our many girls. Unfortunately, Pauline was very good at the game, and we had to settle for four players (three girls and one boy).

Also, there had been a mix-up, and the girls that we expected at the Marktwinnies. People will make mistakes.

Despite all this, morale was good, and we were confident that we could do well.

Besides, the team we were playing against had three people on it. The tournament was announced that the winning team would play in three games against a different team each night, and the teams with the best records at the end would go to the semi-finals, then the finals, and forth.

Our name was called, and we were instructed to proceed to court two. They called as the Marktwinnies by Moriarty, Jr., even though we were expected to be Cary. It was spelled Marktwinnies, and it was being pronounced Marktwinnies.

The presentation, I thought, was not the best. We looked out of the angle of our eyes, and to look for the door, three percent blind.

In great movies like "Fatal Attraction," the game is usually won by the addition of a key player, and everyone leaves the half park with that player on his shoulders.

Although as we did not win, there was a blast of ice-cold air coming out of that room before we could get out in the hall. I thought it would be a very memorable evening to any of you readers, I know that a few of us were not going to forget it for some time.

The Thrill Of Victory And The Agony Of...

Not worried about all that, we took to the court, ball-best on victory. We lost that game, badly (15-11). During the course of the game, however, the other two members of our team showed up. During the break that we had between games, I told anضارل cognizant story about how my bowling team is a similar situation. After having a game, come back to practice and do not take the place for the season.

We ended up leaving early with a perfect record. I must admit, even though we didn't win, we still had fun, going out there and giving it all we've got.

Incredibly, in that same game, we even had people cheering for us. It doesn't matter to me that it was the team that scored to get the perfect record. The team we were playing if they win or lose, but how you play the game.

Victory is not the most vital element of any sporting event, it is the manner of play that is important. We ended up leaving early with a perfect record, I must admit, even though we didn't win, we still had fun, going out there and giving it all we've got.

Even though it may not seem to be a very memorable evening seeing all your friends, I know that a few of us will make it to forget it for some time. Sports injuries often take a long time you heal know.

Help For The Hungry

Thanksgiving approaches. Thoughts of gorging on turkey, dressing, cranberry sauce and pumpkin pie begin to creep into my mind. In the USA, Thanksgiving is a time of gluttony for the bounty of food with which this nation is blessed. But not all nations are so fortunate.

Worldwide, many people—millions, in fact—go to bed nightly without enough food on their stomachs. Whatever the causes of their hunger in natural disaster, such as drought, or man-made suffering created by government ineptitude or war is of little concern to the hungry. The empty stomach and the cry of the hungry child trans­cend the cold logic of politics.

On November 17 and 18, 176-St. Louis students, staff and faculty have the opportunity to join in an international effort to ease the pain of the hungry, to feed the hungry who may not even know where their next meal will come from. They may not even know whether there will be a next meal.

The University of Missouri-Kansas City is one of nearly 600 universities and colleges participating in a food drive sponsored by Campus Ministry. This is a national campaign to raise funds and food for ministry. It is good that the university community is being asked to join in a worthy project. The university should be commended for making an effort to do something about the problem of hunger.

Food is a basic human need. We all have the opportunity to join an international effort to ease the pain of the hungry. Let us not take this opportunity for granted. Let us join in a worthy cause. Let us take this opportunity to make a difference, however small, for the suffering of others.

Golf Tips

by John Kigleo

And now, a few words on me.

I'm a golfer. And a poor one at that. I am trying to improve my already abysmal game. It is a question of survival. Not to be too dramatic, but if I am not improving, I shall in all likelihood end up as a serf on a golf course in the next world. How many times have I stood in the classroom thinking: "What the hell! I'll never use this on the real grid!"

But then, I always remember what Dr. Albert Einstein said to me when I was just a boy, living in the city. "He said, "If your civilization depends on our overestimating the renaissancemen and hopscotchen who chance

What in the world could that hill at the curb of our cartoon this week be? A peddler? Perhaps, but I don't see how this could be worse off. I see no obvious profit to the peddler in the long run. It might be a better idea to take it to the city and let them take care of it. The idea of a peddler on a hill is not a very profitable one.

To the editor:

What a waste! I really don't see the point of a peddler on a hill. It could have been used for something more constructive. Why not use the hill for something that would benefit the community? It could have been used for a park, a playground, or even a parking lot.

I agree with the previous letter writer. The peddler on the hill is a waste of space. It would have been better used for something else, such as a community garden or a children's playground. It's a shame that such a valuable piece of real estate is being used for nothing.

Elderly

Most personal care workers are paid minimum wage and can afford to spend only a few cents per hour on public transportation. Often it is impossible to find an agency that pays this workers to work in certain areas, he said. Wagner pointed out that there is a shortage of state funds to pay for the services needed by the elderly.

The third failing Wallace cited in his report was that the agencies and the needs of the elderly. The problem lies with the agencies who have contracts with the Missouri Division of Aging, he said. The agencies often have high turnover rates, and inadequate equipment.

"I heard about stories about workers who come to the elderly person's home just once or twice a day and then, when there is no one to stop by, they don't show up," Wallace said. "They say, "I can't make it, I'm sick." But the reality is, they have broken down this barrier of the elderly person's home to relieve them of this burden."

"In the morning, but often no personal care worker would come to them. As a result, he would lie in bed all day. Obviously, this is not living a normal life," Wallace said.

"We need to focus on the elderly family of the elderly person may be concerned with maximizing the elderly person's independence," he said. "We cannot give up and put the elderly person in a nursing home, he said."

One idea about respite care currently in operation is the Missouri Division of Aging, he said. This program is a respite care program, which offers a basic level of care to elders who need a basic requirement.

"We need to focus on the elderly family of the elderly person may be concerned with maximizing the elderly person's independence," he said. "We cannot give up and put the elderly person in a nursing home, he said."

Wallace said that the fast can be done in any religious reason, but you might want to help others do so. For the elderly who are unable to fast because of medical reasons, Wagner suggested."
