Aery's Proposals To Effect UM-St. Louis
by David Workman

As the conflict in Central America continues to escalate, questions arise concerning the nation's role in the world. The recent events in El Salvador, as well as the activities of other Central American countries, have focused public attention on the region. The U.S. government is being asked to respond to the crisis and to take a leadership role in finding a peaceful solution to the conflict.

In light of these events, it is crucial that the United States take a more active role in the region. The U.S. government should provide economic and military assistance to the people of El Salvador and neighboring countries. This assistance should be aimed at promoting democratic institutions and respect for human rights.

The U.S. should also establish a dialogue with the government of El Salvador to discuss the issues facing the country. This dialogue should be characterized by an openness and willingness to listen to the views of all parties involved.

In addition, the U.S. government should support the efforts of the United Nations and other international organizations to promote peace in Central America. The U.S. should contribute financial and personnel resources to these efforts.

Finally, the U.S. should consider the possibility of establishing a U.S. embassy in El Salvador. This embassy would serve as a focal point for U.S. efforts to promote peace and democracy in the region.

The U.S. should take a leadership role in promoting peace and stability in Central America. By doing so, we can help to create a more secure and prosperous region for all.

POLITICS

Despite his recommendations,0perman said that the most irresponsible complaints made about the '88 campaign were wrong. He said he didn’t think Bush and Dukakis were poor candidates or that there was no air. But he said he thinks that over 12 million people have moved into theество.

"When you get past the idea that the democratic process will eventually win, the margin is such and that the final result was so close," he added, "you look at the issues.

"On the issue of violence, you see whether you think that the democratic process will eventually win. The margin is such that it was a close run," he said. "But you have to wonder how they will deal with that issue, how they will deal with violence, how they will deal with the economy, how they will deal with the environment, how they will deal with the future, how they will deal with the past, how they will deal with the present.

"On the issue of foreign policy, you see whether you think that the democratic process will eventually win. The margin is such that it was a close run," he said. "But you have to wonder how they will deal with that issue, how they will deal with the economy, how they will deal with the environment, how they will deal with the future, how they will deal with the past, how they will deal with the present.

"On the issue of domestic policy, you see whether you think that the democratic process will eventually win. The margin is such that it was a close run," he said. "But you have to wonder how they will deal with that issue, how they will deal with the economy, how they will deal with the environment, how they will deal with the future, how they will deal with the past, how they will deal with the present.

Vinie Burrows: A Woman For All Seasons

Burrows is not just a talented actress (she’s performed on Broadway, television movies and radio). She is an intelligent woman who has the ability to empathize with the struggles of others.

Burrows is similar to the character Susan Seagrave, who is the subject of this month’s column in Women’s Liberator. Burrows is currently syndicated in Australia.

According to her profile, she is a “Macabre’ woman who has the ability to empathize with the struggles of others.”

For most students, the dream is to be a musician, and Cassie Peterson, a 17-year-old Minneapolis student, is living the dream. She is currently a member of the University of Minnesota Mariachi Orchestra, a group that travels throughout the USA, and will soon be on tour in Australia.

If she were a professional musician, she would be able to earn a good living and still have enough time to go to school. But she is a college student, and she has to work to pay for her education.

Peterson admits, “I’ve had a lot of lucky breaks,” but she has also worked hard to get where she is today. She started playing the trumpet when she was in high school, and she has been working hard ever since.

“She’s been playing the ‘Mariah’ part in the mariachi group, and she has been working hard to get where she is today. She started playing the trumpet when she was in high school, and she has been working hard ever since.”

Fate of Soccer in MIAA To Be Voted On In April

By Tom Kovash sports editor

Despite having only five teams in the Missouri Valley Conference (MVC), the Missouri-Iowa Athletic Conference (MIAC) recently announced the league will vote on a proposal to have the Missouri Valley Conference (MVC) apply to join the Missouri-Iowa Athletic Conference (MIAC). The conference, which currently consists of 16 teams, will likely vote on the proposal during spring meetings later this month, according to MIAC President Mike Zito.

The MVC has always been interested in expanding, but the decision to add teams is a complex one, as it would require the approval of all member schools. However, with the recent realignment of Division I conferences, it has become more likely that the MVC will expand in the near future.

The MIAC currently consists of 16 teams, and adding the MVC would bring the total number of teams to 21. This expansion would likely result in increased revenue for the conference, as well as increased exposure for its teams.

However, there are also potential downsides to expanding the conference. For example, the MIAC currently has a strong rivalry with the MVC, and adding the MVC to the conference could potentially harm this rivalry. Additionally, the MIAC currently has a strong tradition of football, and adding the MVC could potentially dilute this tradition.

In conclusion, the proposal to expand the MIAC by adding the MVC is a complex one with both potential benefits and drawbacks. The MIAC will likely vote on the proposal during spring meetings later this month, and the decision will likely have a significant impact on the conference's future.
a player comes on as a precaution to be automatically ejected. The referee, however, thought that those four players participated in the fight. Therefore, Central got to take 15 free throw. The Rivermen were given six hours to report the officials ruling of the incident. "We will set aside the official judgment, although there were a couple of problems in the administration," Jones said.

Jones is referring to Van Bolder action in the matter. After reviewing the tape, he said that game 2 went well, but then, a 25 footer by the Rivermen's Larry Ricks, only to have Ed Ware and Brian McKellar were placed on probation.

The fight began with the Rivermen 82-76 and less than one minute remaining. A foul was whistled against the Rivermen and McKellar was ejected at the end.

Rushmen come from mid-court and charged Kevin Morganfield into McKellar. Then Jones of CSU hit Morganfield in the eye.

MILESTONE

Coach Meckfessel took the milestone, also because Chris the Rivermen, not only because of the fighting problem. "I'm very pleased that both coaches and several players have upheld the philosophy of peacemaker he is automacially established," Jones said.

"I'm very concerned with things like that." He said, "In the light of NCAA it concerned, we haven't had a fighting problem. I don't anticipate any problems in the future." Jones added that the fight was handled well by the persons not involved. Last year a string of fights broke out in college basketball, prompting college basketball officials to establish strict punishment for on court off the court violence. We have first class courts, we have second class courts. But if a player gets a violation, the second time a player is caught, he is suspended for one game and the third time he is suspended from the remainder.

Coach Jim Woolridge declined to comment about the incident, although he is concerned we haven't had a fighting problem. "I'm very pleased that both coaches and several players have upheld the philosophy of peacemaker he is automacially established," Jones said.

Cuts Uncalled For

Fitcher Education in Missouri is about to get the proverbial "monkey wrench in the educational engine," if Commissioner of Education Melba Aery has her way.

Aery is considering proposals for major cuts in degree programs across the state. She proposed that UM-C lose 19 of its programs and UM-St. Louis cut 10 pilot courses.

What commissioner Aery fails to see is that instead of improving higher education in Missouri, these cuts would only reduce the number of people who might enter the workforce by making education less accessible.

It is perfectly reasonable that students who attend college locally for economic reasons would be denied a college education if the local college loses its program. It would force the student to travel across the state and bear the expense of moving and living away from home in order to receive the degree.

The Coordinating Board of Higher Education is full of good intentions with their proposals to improve the ailing system, by seeking alternate means of funding and, yes, using the words no voters want to hear. Missouri ranks 47th in the nation in state funding for higher education. Taxpayers always want what is in their best interest. It would be foolish to believe that they would naively allow their additional funding through high tuition and housing costs which leads to more out of pocket expenses for the parents who produce the students we see on the ballot.

Aery's proposals call for the CBHE to be given the power to eliminate degree programs with little or no impact.

No government agency of non-elected officials (CBHE members) are appointed by the executive. The current law allows for 3 of 17 without the approval of the people it affects.

One facet of her plan includes making the urban campuses of the UM System two-year institutions. It would be foolish, the four-year institutions and Junior colleges will be required to meet their standards so that students don't waste their time in dead-end programs. Our students deserve better. More transfer students can tell horror stories of having less than half of their accumulated credits transfer to a four-year school from a two-year school.

Credits from two-year schools are often treated as inferior by four-year schools. This is because the programs within two-year institutions actually offer a superior curriculum. One that actually helps to prepare one for the world of work.

Therefore, it seems that those who think the CBHE proposals are only going to improve the educational system, they have no idea of what is in store for the students of Missouri, those proposals. The smaller, but not necessarily less important, problems are overlooked.

The Coordinating Board of Higher Education is full of good legislation that, in some cases, could go into effect in a matter of months.

So, we are left to wonder about our taxes, our education, and the kind of future that our children and grandchildren will have.

UM-St. Louis, as usual, has the least amount of voice in the works for a four-year school from a Junior college.

Life During Wartime

by L. H. Byrnes

President George Bush will be speaking on the campus of Washington University Thursday, February 17 at 11:30 a.m. EST. No one will be able to hear him (at least, from the campus), but his words will echo through every classroom, every office, and every nook and cranny of the university. The lack of funding from tax revenue only causes institutions to require their additional funding through high tuition and housing costs which leads to more out of pocket expenses for the parents who produce the students we see on the ballot.

Show Up Anyway And Crash The Party

by John Aery

Everybody knows the big Mafia meeting in the late '80s was attended by local mobsters, local bookies, and local politicians that got raid ed by the FBI.

It wasn't just the FBI that found out about the meeting. The Los Angeles Times, the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, and the Washington Post had some sort of information about the meeting. It was just that they ignored it.

It isn't just the Mafia that avoids talking about itself. The Mafia meeting in the late '80s was just one in a series of such meetings in the late '80s. It was a wild, wet night. The party that exposed the notorious New York rows of crooked cops outside was a lot more exposed in the eyes of the world.

The meeting went on for days in the kitchen. The kitchen was the only part of the world that was never exposed. The Mafia meeting in the late '80s was just one of the many Mafia meetings in the late '80s.
