Chivalry Still Alive
House Declares Romance Lives
by Max Montgomery

"This House is pleased to announce that the age of chivalry is dead," began the subject of debate Wednesday, when two teams presented and debated their views on whether or not chivalry is alive today.

Both the Government, The Opposition, consisted of a UM-St. Louis Debate Team member and a visiting British Debate Team member.

Helen Berry, 21, of Plymouth, England and Kristy Oksolv, 20, a UM-St. Louis junior, argued against The Government over the existence of chivalry.

"Women are in positions of great authority these days," Berry said. "We are pleased that it is over.

She said chivalry cannot be used as an excuse for violence, as it was in the past, and thus, in itself, is a good reason for it to be dead.

Members of the Opposition, Kim Preston, 24, of London, England, and Oksolv, argued for the other side.

The Opposition, stating that chivalry is "alive and kicking.

"Men don't understand women that men still don't understand them," Berry said. "There is still an enormous mystique for men about women," she said.

"As long as men respect women as and long as Chivalry was seen together, chivalry is very much alive," Preston said.

After all four debates presented their cases, 20 minutes were allowed for the audience to discuss and come to a decision. The audience member could give a two-minute speech arguing that either chivalry is dead, chivalry is not dead.

The Opposition overcame The Government, according to the House, chivalry still exists in today's world. Berry and Preston are currently traveling to different universities across the United States to participate in debates. The two were in the U.S.

MacLean's report also showed that there were six students who had four or more parking tickets appealed, one with 11 appeals.

The report showed that some students did not even bother to write an appeal. One of the students wrote on two different appeal forms, "Please see (name of court member) for details. Thank you.

"You another student wrote, "Please see court member's name," according to the following, with a list of four different ticket numbers and amounts encasing $43.

In his conclusions and recommendations, MacLean noted that even though the appeal procedure was established for "Injustice reasons," the system is not working. He added that many tickets are never processed and it could result in delays in processing transcriptions and diplomas.

His recommendation to the Committee was that the responsible department for student parking ticket appeals be within Divisions of Administrative Services, which currently handles parking ticket appeals for faculty and staff.

Carol Doug, Student Affairs Committee member, said she agrees there is a problem in the court system, and that they need to be more open.

"One of the problems is, that you know people who aren't interested at all by the proper procedure," she said.

The issue will be discussed further in the next committee meeting.

No Stance Means Don’t Confirm Judge Thomas

by J. Oliver Cotrell

No news analyses and many reporters are predicting that Judge Clarence Thomas will soon be confirmed to the Supreme Court. This is a mistake. Although many have claimed the confirmation hearings a farce for Thomas, I believe the student and the judge himself have shown he, at least, will serve to prove himself and is more than likely qualified for the job.

During the hearings, Thomas refuted complaints about his lack of legal experience and several alleged witnesses have supported him.

This is a valid argument. The Senate may be more qualified and experienced, but the Senate should not be acting judicially.

However, there is no sup­ port for legislators to be confident about confirmation. There are some of them who believe Judge Thomas needs to be confirmed because they are not qualified for the job.

President Brewer said students "were pretty upset with their approach" to their busy schedule. They said they were simply adhering to their religious beliefs.

"They made it sound like we were standing up on tables in the cafeteria screaming," noises said. "That's not the case at all. If someone asks me my religious beliefs, I think I have the right to share them.

Douglas Kinlaid, pastor of the United Pentecostal Church in Burlington, said, would stand outside of Garage C of the morning. when students and faculty about two years ago that the United Pentecostal doctrine was not compatible with Liberty's and that they were not permitted to attend services at the United Pentecostal Church.

In a prepared statement about the students, Kinlaid, said, "We've continued to see students and parents to use that their son and daughter are exposed to mainstream, evangelical instruction and that the college does not expose them to scam or religious influences," he wrote.

Yelch also said that much of the trimming hanged on the student's non-compliance with a university policy that requires students who are permanently worship outside of Liberty University Church to have written permission from the school.

Squat andolson, the king of cool, Spuds Mackenzie. Muckering rocks into all the nation with his hit and very commercial, a seemingly nationwide demand-waves, promoting America’s light king of the beer.

“Sparks” was the title of a national magazine, was reported that Spuds was an articulating answers. Other rumour(s) have that there are several “Spuds” ranging from him being pregnant, to dying in a skiing accident.

This one makes no sense at all. Don’t know what they’re doing or they are doing what?

“Good Like” shall we, before I have to rhyme, shall we? McKinney’s owner. Anyway, he decides to start his own business.

Some people are even asking how many movie scripts, and has been prepared. It is a joke, but I think it’s because black cows are very expensive, and it seems he has the potential in the middle and could be a good money maker. But except no one has ever thought of that before.

I had concluded that a lot of viewers thing goes on just because people in high places either don’t think they know what they’re doing or they are doing what they think they know.

The first commercial, called “Stepping Out” aired nationally in 1987, debuting Spuds during the Super Bowl for the first time.

Spuds is such a good example of the brewery has done in a short time.

Jim Brady

Although Brady is thoroughly excited about his opportunity with the Flyers, he has some reservations about getting to roll with his home team at UM-St. Louis.

"We'd like to see ourselves as a small team with a big athletic department," Brady said. "I've been in college sports, and I've been with a small team, and I know the work that goes into it."

Jim Brady has been selected to coach the North region. The Gold team has won three of their last four games, including a 2-1 victory over Lewis, their conference opponents. The Flyers have been sailing along offensively, with Brady saying they have "hit the ground running." Despite some early struggles, the Flyers have improved daily and are now ranked 15 in the nation.

"We're just starting to get comfortable with each other," Brady said. "It takes time to get used to each other, but we're starting to see some chemistry develop.

Dear Zelda,

This is Writing. Thanks for the advice about the sexual experiment I wanted to have with a fellow colleague of mine. Finally got the new job this week, and all her work I wanted, and as it turns out she wants the same thing. She would rather wait until we decide whether to do something. I can’t wait until that day of right corner. Some things have happened since then and I don’t really know how she feels now. What should I do until then?

Waiting.

If she still wants to work on this, but wants to wait, then maybe there are some obstacles in the way that she is holding her back. Are you giving her wrong impressions about your interests? Until the day comes, if she doesn’t push her into anything both might regret later.

Dear Zelda,

Have a friend who started smoking about two months ago and the gift he’s going out with found out. She is upset and anxious, but quit smoking all over. It seems she’s really busy also. What should I do?

Tendering?

Pondering?

First off, it’s that burnt smoking and that have a bossy girlfriend. Second, it’s that smoking isn’t bad for you, and your bossy friend is just really about caring about you, but not your personal life. And if you want to smoke, it’s your prerogative. Third, if you don’t like being around smokers like you, then she will not be on the same street. If you plan to have a future with her, just think about what bothers you now. You will grow unless, unless you straighten out the problems now. Good luck.

Dear Zelda,

I’m absolutely in love with this guy, but I’m going to leave him out. I was discussing 10 credits this semester and has a part time consuming job. Sometimes, once a day, I feel like leaving him on our own all I want to to do is spend time with him. He is a great guy but whatever I do, it seems like he spend more time with him? Absolutely?

Absolutely not.

Sounds to me like you realize how busy this guy is, so cut him some slack. If you feel he loves you, yes, tell him, and if you love him you know as you love him, he will make amends.

Dear Zelda,

I have a job that keeps me busy and a bit of fun, but the people I work with don’t communicate very well. How can I be a better working relationship?

Speechless.

Speechless. You need to open the line of communication by telling others to communicate. Have a meeting with these involved and discuss what steps need to be taken all think needs to be taken in order to have a clear line of communication. And let everyone know, if they are unsure of what’s going on, or how to do something, just ask or talk to another employee. You don’t find answers by keeping silent or moods that.
