UMSL Enrollment Down

by Greg Albers
Current news reporter

Enrollment on the University of Missouri-St. Louis campus for the fall 1992 semester has dropped nearly 10 percent from last year's figures. On-campus enrollment for this semester is 11,774, that is down from 12,541 last year. Total enrollment is 14,926, down from 15,620 last year.

Chancellor Blanchette Touchell said the drop of enrollment is due in part to the tightening of admission standards. "Since 1991, the numbers of [full-time freshmen] have gone down," Touchell said. "I think it's due to the tightening of admission standards which is due in part to the raising of fees." The admission standards for the University of Missouri-St. Louis were changed to require one year of high school credits in fine art for incoming freshmen. Freshmen are also required to have taken four years of English, three years of math at the level of Algebra I and 2, two years of science, two years of social studies and three additional requirements.

Women, AIDS Topic Of Seminar

by Nancy Lewis

Three million women in the world have AIDS. Women make up 15 percent of the total AIDS population in the United States. And, women ages 15-25 are at greatest risk for contracting the life-threatening AIDS-related disease pneumonitis or cancer. They are usually treated later than men and are more likely to die within two years.

"When most people think of AIDS, they think of gay men," Wilson said. "But new, 100,000 women in the United States are HIV positive. The projections are that in the next 10 years, women will be half of the U.S. AIDS population." Wilson emphasized all women are at risk unless they are celibate or have been in a faithful, monogamous relationship for the past six years. "We have to get the message out that women must tell their partners we are a condom," Wilson said.

Wilson said women who have AIDS die twice as fast as men who have AIDS, often because AIDS symptoms are not diagnosed in women as often as in men, and doctors do not know that a woman who has changing psychological problems has AIDS. Most women are diagnosed with AIDS when they are pregnant and receiving prenatal care or when they develop a skin-damaging AIDS-related disease such as pneumonia or cancer.

"Women are usually treated later in the stages of the disease. And a big problem is that until recently, all the medicines of the disease and of the medications used to treat the disease were done exclusively on men," Wilson said.

AIDS is now the leading cause of death of women ages 15-25.

Campus Conducts Alcohol Awareness Week

A Closer Look

The Vice Presidency. President of the Senate. Next in line to America’s diplomatic throne.

The position, for years, has been shunned, overlooked and copyrighted as not so important.

In day-to-day works on Capitol Hill, this may be true. The vice president, in simple terms, doesn’t do that much.

However it is in times like these, the last few days of campaigning before we select our new leader and his or her running mate, that we all take a closer look at the man who comes next.

Many people are saying they feel sorry for the current vice president, in simple terms, doesn’t do that much. Perot has chosen retired Adm. James B. Stockdale as his running mate, and should happen to be a very good one.

Perot has said he has many enemies and more than once, death warrants have been issued on him and his family. It’s not really fair, when in the voting booth, to say ‘nothing’s going to happen to him.’ Just something to think about.

Both Perot and Stockdale have said the running mate choice was completely personal because of their past relationships. Friendships that strong are hard to come by these days, and Perot obviously knows how to choose his friends as well as he knows how to choose investments. But running mates?

With his vast experience in the armed services, Adm. Stockdale has proven dedication to his country numerous times, but, could this man fulfill the duties of President if something were to happen to Perot? Changes in the nation’s social and political processes. This may be true and there is no denying he deserves respect for what he lived through. But, he simply doesn’t have the experience or any other abilities to be the leader of this country.

Even with his vast experience in the armed services, Adm. Stockdale could not possibly handle the position of commander in chief.

Just something to think about.

It is not until the 1840's, when a large migration of Irish peasants came to America after a great potato famine, that this Gaelic holiday reached the United States. Many years later, the Romans came to Britain, bringing with them legends that had been passed down from the Druids (priests), who celebrated Samhain, "hallowed of the summer," on the Druid New Year.

On Druid New Year's Eve, November 31, the Lord of Death permitted ghosts, witches, goblins and other spirits to wander freely for the new year. The Druids believed that the spirits to wander freely for the new year. The Druids believed that the souls of the dead would return to the earth to enjoy the harvest. Many years later the Romans came to Britain, bringing with them legends that had been passed down from the Druids (priests), who celebrated Samhain, "hallowed of the summer," on the Druid New Year.

The Druids believed that the souls of the dead would return to the earth to enjoy the harvest. They made offerings to ward off these spirits, which were feared. The Druids also disguised themselves in masks and costumes, believing that the spirits, who were free for only one night, would recognize them and thus do them no harm.

Many years later, the Romans came to Britain, bringing their festival and added customs of their own to Samhain.

The current practice of this Irish and German tradition that began as far back as the second century.

When children leave their homes, doored in their costumes with candy bags in hand, filled with stories of excitement, fear, know what or why they are celebrating.

These days, you might spend Halloween helping younger siblings or your own children with the finishing touches on their costumes, ducking from door to door or street to street to make sure your car doesn't get egged.

But in the old days, Halloween meant something different. Our American celebration of Hallowe'en is actually a combination of customs from the English, Irish and Scottish folk lore that began so far back as the second century.

"We just like to give people something to listen to," he continued. "There are things I feel strongly about, sure, built into every song. If you want to get more out of it, you can."

Dodge, Alan Godfrey and Matt West went to school together in Belfast since they were 11 years old. They each played in separate bands and then together for a while, "really, just for fun," Dodge said.

The most often played song is "Trevor and the Inexp Jan. just fell into place."

Although common in large groups friendship relationships, Dodge said there are few arguments and the friendships are unbreakable. "Because we know each other so well, there are no dangers," he said. "During our last tour, we toured for four and a half months in a Winnebago. There were six of us and it was very cramped. If you can take that, you can take any thing."

In St. Louis, after the end of the baseball season, baseball fans are looking forward to the Blues.

It's not so much about the team's performance so much as the fans themselves. Baseball fans are passionate about their team, often forming strong bonds with each other. They're always waiting for the next season to start, even if it's just a few months away. The anticipation builds as the season draws closer, and the excitement is palpable among those who love the game.

One of the most exciting events for baseball fans is Opening Day. It's the first day of the season, and it's a time when everyone is hopeful and excited. The weather is usually warm, and the atmosphere is electric. It's a day when the team takes the field, and the fans cheer them on.

However, not every season is as exciting as the last. Some seasons can bring disappointment and frustration. But baseball fans are resilient, and they keep on supporting their team through thick and thin. It's a game that brings joy to many, and it's a game that will always have a special place in the hearts of those who love it.

The end of the baseball season is always bittersweet. It's a time when fans have to say goodbye to their favorite players and the team. But it's also a time when they look forward to the next season and the promise of new beginnings. The excitement builds as the team announces its roster and the fans wonder who will make the cut and who will be playing for the team.

Overall, baseball fans are a dedicated and passionate group. They love the game, and they love their team. It's a sport that brings joy and happiness to many, and it's a sport that will always have a special place in the hearts of those who love it.
