Student patrol walks

by Michael O'Brien of The Current staff

Several students are deployed to conduct door-to-door patrols. These students are trained and equipped with a set of tools that are used to check the security of rooms and buildings. The patrols are scheduled to occur once a week, and they aim to deter any potential intruders.

Student wagons war on waste

by Susan Benton of The Current staff

The University of Missouri-St. Louis has launched a new recycling program on campus. The program aims to encourage students, faculty, and staff to reduce waste and increase recycling efforts. The program includes the provision of recycling bins in dormitories, residence halls, and academic buildings, as well as the implementation of a campus-wide recycling plan. The program is expected to reduce the amount of waste sent to landfills and contribute to a more sustainable campus environment.

The cost of tuition escalation

by Bill Ingoldby of The Current staff

UM-St. Louis has seen a significant increase in the cost of tuition over the past few years. The cost of tuition has risen from $574.20 per credit hour in 1983-84 to $974.20 in 2003. This increase is due to a variety of factors, including inflation, rising costs of operation, and state funding cuts. The cost of tuition has made it more challenging for students to afford higher education, and it has raised concerns about accessibility and affordability.
Enough is enough
by Michael O'Toole

With rising tuition and other expenses, it's important to ask the question: How many students are benefiting from the money spent on university-related expenses? Are there really half the number of administrators receiving double the amount of allocations for student government organizations? And why doesn't it seem to fit the mold? Are demographic breakdowns so important? The financial burdens with manic financial decisions are apparently labeled "Curvatures" or "Oblivions" of the current slice of the Curators' cake. However, the reality is that students contribute to the integrity of the scholar. The players and owners have charges against them for staying or spending their money elsewhere. Some students have the audacity to charge a fee for their signature. It's a simple way to keep the system in line. The current system is just as much when it comes to the future. Every year, a college education is worthless and more, the price to get one is more and more.

Many students graduate each semester with a multitude of down-sizing and job creation. Students are forced into situations that have little to do with what they studied while in school. Students who want to use their paid-for education are finding the need to go into business or find the skills they have trained because there are cost-cutting measures that involve student loans are graduating with no viable job opportunities and huge student debt. Students who have been forced to live on student loans are graduating with no viable job opportunities and huge student debt. Students who have been forced to live on student loans are graduating with no viable job opportunities and huge student debt.

This is an original concept for the UM-system curators: reduce cost to achieve the curators goal of doubling tuition in five years. If the University of $327.5 million is to achieve the curators goal of doubling tuition in five years, it will strike me odd that a University of $327.5 million per year to keep your campus so that a University of $327.5 million per year to keep your campus...
UM-St. Louis Choirs Go Classical

Erik and Sean visited us all at UM-St. Louis Singers and Community Choir members took the stage for their first concert of the season Tuesday evening. Performers were in fine form, flowing skin or black suits, lending an air of sophistication to the performance.

Dr. James Richards, assistant professor of music at UM-St. Louis, conducted the singers and orchestra in white tie and tails. A golden harp sat at the left of the stage, with laptops (three) to the rear. Violins, flutes, oboes, and clarinets all played a part in the beauty of the sound and singing.

The concert was held at the Thomas Kmetz Performing Arts Center Kirkwood, the acoustically sound stage of the Kirkwood Symphony Orchestra that provides music for the concert. The smaller, yet more intimate space for the Kirkwood Symphony Orchestra allows for a more intimate and earthy sound.

The concert was a collection of three groups, the UM-St. Louis Singers, the UM-St. Louis Community College-Meramec Chorale and the Kirkwood Symphony Orchestra. The idea of the concert began as the brainchild of Dr. Richards, artistic director of the Kirkwood Symphony Orchestra and Chorale Director, in their annual concert.

The concert included three different pieces, a piece for the Kirkwood Symphony Orchestra and the UM-St. Louis Singers, and a piece for the Kirkwood Symphony Orchestra and Chorale Director. The concert included music for the stage and in the concert hall.

Bone

E. 1999 Eternal

Bone's eleventh album has been seen as his biggest hit to date and it peaked at number two on the charts.

The album features collaborations with other artists such as Mystikal and Shawty Lo, and includes hit singles like "Slow Motion" and "Talkin' Bout a Ring." The album received positive reviews for its straightforward and raw rap style, and it solidified Bone Thugs-N-Harmony's status as a leading force in the West Coast hip-hop scene.

The group had previously been known for their hard-hitting sound and their dedication to their craft, and Eazy-E's passing had left a void that the group was determined to fill. The album was recorded and released shortly before Mack-10's death, adding a sense of urgency and intensity to the project.

The album's release was a significant moment in the group's career and it helped to advance their status as one of the leading West Coast rap groups. It also served as a tribute to Eazy-E, who had passed away just months earlier. The album was released posthumously and became a critical and commercial success, further cementing the group's place in the hip-hop pantheon.

Well hey, the end of October comes the end of the U-M-St. Louis soccer season, both men's and women's. Congratulations to both teams. For our women.

The Riverwomen's season ended with a much deserved 106-10 tie. Congratulations to the team. We hope to see them again next year.

For our men, the season is over. Congratulations to the men's soccer team as well as to Coach Ken Hudson. With a respectable record of 10-7-3, the Rivermen have more than a few things and people to brag about such as Jennifer Burton.

Jennifer Burton. I need to say it. This woman is good on the field. Beingieg being barged, tackled, tripped, and checked by opponents, Burton put in some amazing back in the ball in the fall. Burton penned the Rivermen a season high of 195 shots and hasn't won a game on the road.

Abernathy faced 195 shots and seven games made her a outstanding player, As a freshman, she didn't have a front row seat for the Riverwomen's season. The team finished the 1995 season with sixteen points, seven victories, seven losses, and two ties. It was Jennifer Burton who led the charge this year.

Burton is currently 6-7-3 and hasn't won a game on the road.

"It's a matter of pride," said the reduction of the patrol from 18 to 5 members. Moore was able to bridge the gap between the Police Department and the campus community.

"We felt the program was important," Moore said. "It destroyed a good program doesn't make any sense.

The Student Patrol positions were paid $4.25 per hour. The students who worked for the patrol were on call between 20 to 30 hours per week. Now, with the elimination of the program, students can call the UM-St. Louis Police to get escorts to their vehicles.

Roeseler said that he felt more comfortable with the University security personnel handling such duties.

"If anything, the patrol was unused," said Moore. "I think the student patrol served a good function.

The letter stated that "members of the campus from 18 to 5 members had to be in a few instances where the program could not uphold the needs of the campus.

"We could've guaranteed people were going to be where they were supposed to be," Roeseler said. "The program became more headaches than what it was. As it existed, it just wasn't working right.

"I didn't have a problem with the program as long as it ran the way it was supposed to," Roeseler said.
