Applications go out for student curator
One student announces candidacy, SGA president potential candidate
by Bill Rolls

The search is on for the next student representative to the UM Board of Curators, and UM-St. Louis will provide that student. Applications for the student curator position became available Tuesday, Michael Rankine, vice president of the Student Government Association, said one person has taken an application but none have been submitted by press time.

So far, Josh Daggett, a sophomore chemistry major, is the only student to take an application. He said he decided to run for the student curator after Avery announced at the Sept. 27 SGA meeting that UM-St. Louis would limit the search.

“Just something I want to do just because I think I should have a lot of influence on the board,” Daggett said. “It’s a position to make a difference if you really want to try.”

Members of the Interfraternity Student Council have suggested UM-St. Louis SGA President Jim Avery could be a possible candidate. Karl Steen, president of the UM-Rolla Student Council, said.

“No one was just discussing who might be able to run. Avery is eligible to be, but his name was just one that we threw out,” Steen said.

“Just said, hey, you could run.”

Avery said he has not submitted an application for the position. Avery has been removed from the selection process and has posted his interest to Randies.

A committee will interview all the candidates and submit three recommendations to Gov. Mel Carnahan, who will appoint the student curator Jan. 1, 1998.

Every three years the governor of Missouri appoints a UM student as a representative to the UM Board of Curators, and the appointment is staggered.

New system head meets with UM student leaders
President stresses University’s research mission
by David Baugher

Maeul Pachecó, who took over as head of the University of Missouri system Aug. 1, met with the presidents of the four campuses last week to discuss his goals for the university.

He said one of his goals is to involve students more in the system administrative process. He said he would like to meet with students at all four campuses in the near future.

Commenting on tuition increases, Pachecó said tuition "should" and would likely only rise by the rate of inflation, ending any-settlement emergencies.

Pachecó emphasized the University’s research mission and spoke of the desire to expand UM-St. Louis degree programs.

by David Baugher

Maeul Pachecó called one of the state’s largest political figures the St. Louis and St. Charles offices.

Pachecó, who sits on the board of directors for Anheuser-Busch, has defended his membership with the company, saying he feels confident the company is in compliance with some regulations.

Building a bridge
Construction will link CCB, SSB by walkway
by David Baugher

A new connecting bridge is being constructed between the Computer Center Building and the Social Science Building. The brick and glass structure is expected to be completed by the beginning of 1998, Richard Schuster, vice chancellor of Administrative Services, said.

The walkway, expected to cost an estimated $490,000, was originally supposed to be built with the Computer Center, but the design plans changed.

"When the computer building was built, we hit a favorable period in the construction cycle," said Jim Avery, who has been Money loss left over in the original account.

Other funding came from gifts and bond issue funds, along with cash in restricted accounts already earmarked for the Computer Center.

"The money was there to fund tabs and to improvements on the building," Schuster said. The project, approved about a month ago, will also include the reconstruction of the stairways in SSB.

However, Schuster said that the potential noise factor could delay the case room revamp until summer.

The University Outreach and Extension Program is serving the Missouri land-grant universities' mission and faculty to meet the needs of the citizens of Missouri. UM-St. Louis is located in the East Central Region of the Extension's services which as comprised of 10 counties. The University Outreach and Extension Center provides extension, research and education programs throughout the UM System and Lincoln University in Missouri City to the surrounding communities.

"Originally the intent was to bring university and business into the community," said Roxanne Miller, an information specialist serving in the St. Louis County area. The Extension program developed from the national Cooperative Extension Service established by Congress in 1914.

The University Extension program now employs specialists in five primary thematic areas: Community Development, Environmental Quality, Economic & Employment Issues, Family Strengths, and Nutrition and Health. There are 44 faculty experts serving the East Central Region.

By phoning or emailing one of the county offices, a written request offers information for classes, workshops, seminars, conferences, demonstrations and various information technologies supplied by the different experts in the individual counties, Miller said.

There are many different areas from which county residents can choose and individual counties have different needs to be met for their citizens. Lincoln County has a livestock specialist, Franklin County employs a agronomy (agriculture) specialist, and St. Louis County contains an urban youth and family specialist.

The program is a "site operated" by federal, state, and county funds.

Because of this support, in most cases there is no cost to the citizen requiring service except for a nominal fee for cost recovery (travel, lodging, meals) and publications.

One of the unique features of the Missouri Extension program is that it is the only state wide program to have land-grant universities: the four University of Missouri's schools and Lincoln University, a university established in 1862 by the state of Missouri for minority students, particularly African Americans.

OPINION/Editorial

Curator search may raise questions

The Issue:

UM-St. Louis will provide the next student representative to the Board of Curators, but no one has officially applied for the position.

We Suggest:

President Jim Avery has the opportunity to create a committee to make a recommendation about the student representative position. Avery may also choose to make himself a candidate for the position.

Our Opinion:

Avery is well-regarded by the Board of Curators, meaning the campus community would likely be comfortable with his representation. Avery would be familiar with the issues facing the student body, and his experience as a student representative could provide valuable insight to the Board.

Student leader's roles can be very confusing

The student union president is often responsible for representing the students in their interactions with the administration, faculty, and other student leaders. This can be a daunting task, as there are many different stakeholders with whom the president must communicate.

One way to approach this role is to prioritize collaboration and communication. The president should seek out feedback from different groups and work to represent a variety of perspectives. It's also important to maintain open lines of communication with the administration and faculty, as well as other student leaders.

Another approach is to focus on advocacy and activism. The president may use their platform to speak out on important issues and rally support for student causes. This can be an effective way to make change, but it's important to be mindful of the power dynamics involved.

Ultimately, the role of the student union president is multifaceted and requires a balance of different skills and approaches. The key is to be a strong advocate for the student body while also maintaining a collaborative and approachable attitude.

Three in one:

That’s two ways to look at the new Office of Multicultural Relations, which will merge three minority resource programs. The African American Scholars Recruitment Program, Student Support Services Program, formerly part of the Center for Academic Development, and African American Relations, of Academic Affairs, have combined efforts to form the new Multi-Cultural Affairs/Advisers office.

The office will be located in 110 Clark Hall after the autumn and construction is finished.

The Multi-Cultural Relations Office offers a variety of different services geared toward, but not limited to, minority students, including one-on-one interviews, seminars and workshops.

The goal of the center is to enhance academic success of students with disability, and provide academic success.

Gwendolyn Delaney-Porterfield, director of Multicultural Relations at UM-St. Louis and recent recipient of the Sigma Pi Sigma Award from the St. Louis American newspaper, believes in variety and diversity.

“There is need to combine our services so that we can service even more of the population of African American students and other diverse groups.”

The Multi-Cultural Relations Office has released a calendar of upcoming events open to any UM-St. Louis students, including the Networking Programs, a Mid-term Academic Success Workshop and three Student Dialogue Brown Bag series.

The dialogues will cover race relations and minorities and how these groups interact with the UM-St. Louis Police, administration and faculty.

The Quarterly 4.0 Seminars that occurred last Wednesday was to be a well planned and highly attended seminar. The follow-up seminars will be held on October.

According to UM-Louis Chancellor Chancellor Touhill, the money allotted to the three groups has been pooled into the new Multi-Cultural Relations Office.

In fact, the new office has received some extra money.

One reason more money has been given to the newly formed office is that Packnett tends to formally begin an organized system of records. When a student makes an appointment with one of the first student workers, they will be asked to fill out an academic evaluation form. The staff member will conduct an interview with the student.

After the interview, the staff member will complete the evaluation and interview, and the staff member will create a plan of action. Follow-up interviews are also encouraged.

Some minority students have expressed great concern regarding the range of the three programs at one time.

Touhill has met with a few students to explain and defend the action.

“I think it is a period of change and change is very difficult,” Touhill said.

To receive services from the Multi-Cultural Relations Office, call 1-800-827-1996 and ask for Ms. Waddy Wood, until the office is moved to its new location.

Copland flash back to 1970s

The Nixons played one of the handfuls of velvets. They played a seven-song set that day in two hours.

Criticism was made up of all the small crowd 21 ride, and the under 21 crown wa made up of an unusually large percentage of teenage boys. The Nixons played on both and the 15 on his radio. "We" and "Shame About," lead singer Zac Malin played the trumpets for he was surprisingly decent. The band played an encore of songs from Fountains and its latest CD. The encore included the megahit "Hermit" and the "Happy Song."

Overall, the quality of the music was up to the standards that had been anticipated. And it was all about. —Matthew Regenbueger

In search of clarification

I must correct The Current regarding comments attributed to me in the September 2 campus paper article. Becky Rickard contacted me seeking “truth” for the delay in the Honors Hall lot paving. After referring her to the proper manager for more complete information than I could provide, we discussed several general parking issues. Ms. Rickard’s presentation of my comments is no way resembles the manner and tone of our conversation.

I endeavored for three years to get Honors paved. The paving began on Hall Opening Day (the first day of classes, as Ms. Rickard reported), and while it created some inconvenience, the student orientation leaders effectively accommodated the existing dining options to start and then oversaw it as smoothly as possible, to single hand great satisfaction. Kind of like taking the “Holy Grail,” a lofty goal, for people passionate about their work but maybe just out of reach. Or maybe not.

I must admit that Mr. Harrison’s article (front page) August 18, 1997, on the “Food Pole” caught me a bit off guard, but greatly. Ms. Harrison clarified her description in the Sept. 2, 1997, issue with her “tally, my neighbors are strangers to me” revelation. Mr. Harrison and I have not had the opportunity to meet formally and “get to know” one another. For example, I would never have known that Mr. Harrison and Mr. Robles were on different sides of the “free speech issue” as it pertains to graffiti and removal of graffiti. I mean, while Mr. Robles takes the position that freedom of speech must much a limit when the speaker (or writer) degrades them as a whole populace, I happily agree. But to my surprise, Ms. Harrison makes a generalization in her article stating, “I’m pretty sure most of my neighbors are absolutely useless folks,” while admitting to not “knowing them.” This published statement might give me some insight into Ms. Harrison’s personal inventory. Thankfully, I wouldn’t dare to make any assumptions about Mr. Harrison or anyone else, without first meeting them and then taking the long and difficult process of getting to know them.

I would hope that all members of the University community take the time and effort to put to use all of our FSC staff, and we, them, so that we may be better equipped to fill each other’s needs in the coming years.

I have successfully returned from a baseball trip to Kansas City and have been looking forward to it for the past three years. Actually, I have only been plant oned for the past two years because of a different situation in Kansas City for four months, but when I walked into Kauffman Stadium, I was home by that time. We were such a team that the World Series in 1985.

When 1 was a kid in high school, the Royals and Cardinals were going to play each other over Labor Day weekend, in this first since interleague play began. I didn’t think that there would be a chance to get tickets. Surprisingly, there were several tickets remaining, and even though the prices were pretty high, I was still very excited.

This was my second trip to Kansas City, and I have actually been in Kansas City before. When I went with The Current in January, I was on the atmosphere during a baseball game is completely different.

I must say, I was impressed with the stadium. Anyone who is a baseball fan should visit this park because it is beautiful. But anyone who isn’t a fan of a Cardinals fan as I am should visit a that there would be a chance to get tickets. Surprisingly, there were several tickets remaining, and even though the prices were pretty high, I was still very excited.

Volleyball team returns from competitive matches in Wisconsin tourney

by Dave Kinimedy

The women's volleyball team had several tough matches while playing at the Wisconsin-Parkside tournament.

The team played against teams from the Great Lakes International American Conference. The first non-conference opponent was Rollins University from Florida. The Riverwomen didn't win, but the next game was against Wayne State University from the Wayne State University women's volleyball team.

Wayne State is ranked #2 in the nation and #3 nationally. The team played against teams in the Midwest, including the University of Michigan and the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

The next opponent was Wayne State on Saturday. Later on Saturday, the team played against teams from the University of Michigan and the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

The team will try to play their first conference game of the season against Wisconsin-Parkside on Sept. 12. They then play Lewis University on Sept. 13, completing the team's first conference road trip. The team will have to wait several weeks before playing their first home game.

Middlefielders

The team will combine with Marcee and Trott to add speed and depth to the team.

Defender

Defender Dana Thompson-Cummins has made a name quickly in the region for her strong defensive abilities.

Goalie

Samantha Cranfield-The only goalie this season Cranfield will be expected to do a lot of things for the team.
