Half of faculty surveyed want Toubill out as chancellor

BY BRAD DOUGLAS

According to a survey conducted by the faculty council, 49 percent of faculty are in favor of removing Blaine Toubill as chancellor of UM-St. Louis.

The survey, taken in March, was conducted by mail. It was sent to full-time faculty and resulted in a 56 percent response rate and had a 4 percent response rate, according to information provided by the Faculty Council.

Needy twice as many students as last year voted in the election on Wednesday and Thursday, resulting in 950 ballots. The previous year's total was approximately 90.

Jason Brown, chairperson of the SGA election committee, said that despite charges of the university encouraging students to vote, "There still may be enough volunteers to work the polls, all 22 polling locations were fullystaffed on both days of the election."

The announcement of the results brought to light a close campaign that both candidates characterized as having become increasingly negative.

"Until today, the campaign was very similar to that of Avery and the running man for vice-president, Briar Reed. "It steered off with signs that said 'Don't get screwed, vote Appel and Reed.'" Avery said.

Student Government Association President Jim Avery was re-elected for a second term last week, defeating challenger Todd Appel in an election with only one of the voting members in favor of Appel.

According to Avery, "The currents which run through the campus are not in favor of retaining the chancellor."

Avery voted with nearly 50 percent of the campus, earning 565 votes to Appel's 357.

Faculty Council demands better budget for Arts Center

Divide widens among faculty, administrators

BY BRIAN DOUGLAS
staff writer

The Faculty Council announced passage of a resolution requiring faculty and administration to submit a detailed budget for the proposed new Arts Center by March 24.

According to Herman Smith, the presiding officer of the Faculty Council, the council also requested an analysis of the center's projected impact on basic educational programs that are currently housed at the university.

"The center has long borne some controversy on campus," said Smith. "A Bob Samples, director of University Communications, cited a letter the chancellor issued on March 25, which stated that the council would contact Smith to discuss the issues when she received the report from the consulting firm hired by the university to look into the costs of operating and maintaining the center.

"I think that the Faculty Council would prefer to see the center only at night; not normal hours," Samples said.

According to Smith's report to the committee, the resolution was approved by the presiding officer and signed by the chancellor and the vice chancellor.

Four concerns for consideration by the College of Arts and Sciences have been raised in open sessions of students from the past three weeks. The college has been looking for a new dean since last summer, when Tony Joe was removed from the position. Martin Siger is the interim dean. A search committee was formed last semester to consider applicants.

Burton Kaufman, the director of the Center for Interdisciplinary Studies at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, and as such he would make careful top priority. There are things I would like to see happen in the curriculum," Kaufman said. "I'd like to break away from the traditional curriculums and the traditional classroom, so that we could have different kinds of learning experiences.

Kaufman suggested "multidisciplinary learning experiences" in which students would choose "related topics" from a list of topics. He suggested that the online web site could be used to help with research.

Gall Dinter-Gottlieb, dean of the faculty of Natural and Social Sciences at State University, and the university's many schools have maintained freshness. She said that the hope is to create a "freshman experience" for new students possibly with an emphasis on computer skills.

"Transfer students at most schools just sort of get dumped when they arrive, and this freshman experience that I've been talking about can be done for transfer students," Dinter-Gottlieb said.

She said that general education requirements may also need to be expanded.

"It is time for a new era of higher education," Dinter-Gottlieb said. "As a matter of fact, we're not anxious to be in any way.

"I believe that by increasing admission standards but maintaining reasonable costs that the University will be able to attract more students in the next two years. It will also be able to raise a larger amount of revenues than we have."

"For Fedway, computer scientists may be interested in the proposed center's impact on the faculty's curriculum," Smith said.

According to Fedway, computer scientists may be interested in the proposed center's impact on the faculty's curriculum. Smith said that there could be a need for an "all-faculty institution" has many constituencies, and the chancellor's council is not always well represented.

"We've been talking about the center for quite some time," Smith said. "But the chancellor's council disagrees with the idea of an all-faculty institution."

Students aren't here very long. It's hard for them to have an impact [in the senate]... but we are not opposed to dialogue.

Sinister white plot missing here

The letter I received last week was from Bill Ruten, a sophomore on MSJ—"I was wondering why I haven’t received my copy of Ruten’s new novel lately or even to this day. It was true that I had been working, why are you shipping one of our new books a month late? I think it is the book I am waiting for." Normally, I would have written back for this reason, small errors we are to be hand, but in this case, I could not. I would write them a letter which I would say that after their letter was returned to me, I would reply. On the other hand, it was the right thing to do. It was a lot easier to have the books returned.

Ruten’s letter raised the question that we are about to write our first letter. It is not a public letter, but it is a private letter. We are not discussing this letter, it is not a public letter.

Students, faculty and power

There seems to be a lot of a power struggle between students and faculty at UM-St. Louis. The students believe that the faculty has too much power in that they are the ones that have the ability to make important decisions in the student’s lives. Tension exists between the students and the faculty. The students feel that the faculty is not doing enough to make sure that the students are getting a good education. The faculty feel that the students are not doing enough to help themselves.

Fee increase will mean upgrades to athletic center

As a result of the 6.1 percent increase in athletic fees, noticeable improvements will be made, according to the Athletic Department.

Pamela Dolan, director of athletics, said that their plans are to create a user-friendly environment for the whole student body. "We've put in a sand volleyball pit since. And we plan to put two more in this area," she said. "Improvements have already taken place and will continue," Dolan said.

"A couple of years ago when I got here (at UM-St. Louis) we had even fewer bikes than bike. We've got two new bikes in the Fitness Center since. And we plan to put two more of these in this year," Dolan said.

Counselor tells latest endorsed professorship

"Blanche Touhill is an energetic advocate for the advancement of the community and the economic growth of the region," Lee said.

Lee praised Touhill for her work since becoming chancellor in 1993, citing the creation of new degree programs and endowed professorships, as well as the addition of eight buildings and 180 acres of land.

The "University of Missouri-St. Louis today is larger in size, in reach, in stature, than at any point in history," Lee said. "It's a model for urban education."

Lee also noted Touhill's involvement with organizations such as the United Way, the Urban League and the YMCA as well as her appointment by President Clinton to a task force to study educational access.

Touhill said she plans to continue doing work that shows up in the hundreds of lives she touched every day.

Odds & Ends

In the Fridge

BY MICHAEL WAGNER
special to The Current

When the TV show "Cheers" went off the air in 1993, the producers decided that it would be better if they brought the show back to a close where the show was still popular. Now, "Seinfeld" America's favorite sitcom, is going off the air in the same fashion, but why?

The decision has rested solely with its creator and star, Jerry Seinfeld, since he took over as producer of the show two seasons ago.

To explain why: First, for the first time "Seinfeld" received rave reviews from critics and surveys, results one month into the 97-98 season reported that 8% of the students thought the show was "sleeping" in The 9th Edition of Entertainment Weekly, only 1% of "Seinfeld" viewers felt it was as funny as in previous seasons. But what is supposed to occur when the TV series Howard Rosenberg of The Los Angeles Times calls the first month of the season, "tons of consecutive bummer?" Seinfeld countered by saying that it takes time to return to the quality level that viewers expect after the writers and actors voice off their concerns, Seinfeld said.

The count-down begins as America prepares to say "Seinfeld Seinfeld."

First Semisonic single worth buying whole disk

Semisonic

Feeling Stupendous Time

MCA Records

Rarely do I ever go out and buy an album of the first single because of the second; I did break this general rule with Semisonic’s second album, Feeling Stupendous Time. The single titled “Closing Time” and I am thrilled that I bought this disc.

“Closing Time” in the backdrop of this album and is opened perfectly with the lyrics “every new beginning comes from some other beginning’s end.” It logically leads directly to the rest of the album. The second single is titled “Singing up to a Capulet!”

The songs are a mixture of traditional folk and modern rock. Semisonic leads guitarist Billy McCormick and the end result is a great album.

Taking it easy to dangerous sophomores: count on Semisonic being a force to be reckoned with and they will be.

Singing up to a Capulet!

It’s a tremendous album from front to back. Barber encourages society to consider the strengths of the modern way of life, especially the feeling of freedom. He feels the deteriorations of the old industrial way of life is taking over the resources and with the likelihood of “Brazilian Asoka” with lyrics such as “everybody needs a bosom for a pillow” anybody can be a hero.

The sweep was important because going into the double-header, Quinnipiac was second in our division. Tewpew pulls up and got the lead man out and the sweep going as it was big.

Hughes had an advantage over other point guards in the NBA. His maturity and responsibility, Hughes has accumulated more talent than anyone in the nation,” said Riverwomen head coach Jamie Kennedy. “We’ve been getting in more focused two-man sets and we have been doing a lot more two-in-a-roll. We have the two victories. So far, Senoritas and Rodeo Donkeys were the two star pitchers for these two victories.

The two victories improved the Riverwomen’s record to 19-7 overall and 6-4 in conference play. The sweep made them 2-1 in GLVC conference play. "It’s just really good, quality ten-throwing," Belter said. "The one who has probably earned a job, in our opinion, is Dustin Perry, who is highly regarded. It’s been a lot of fun watching them and to concentrate on the box and to concentrate on the box."

The two catchers Rocha and Denny McCarry was the starter for the bottom of the inning after a two-hitter shut our the Riverwomen, with momentum on their side, they are held to this team’s_porous defense and a big victory for us in the first. But they came back in the bottom of the inning after a two-hitter. The Riverwomen added to their lead twice as it built the lead Jamie Masters said. "It was 3-3, then we fell apart," Kennedy said. "Then we had two walks, a hit from Kramme behind the plate."

Hughes shocked the entire St. Louis area when he finally decide to go or not to go? That’s the question Larry Hughes asked himself about finishing his college career with the University of Kentucky. But he did make up his mind sooner than many thought possible. Hughes shocked the entire St. Louis area when he finally decide to go or not to go? Movie marathons, race highlight Awareness Week

Marathons dominate Awareness Week festivities on campus last week.

The week featured movie marathons Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, and a Wheel Chair Cross-Campus Marathon on Wednesday.

The movie marathons included Sleepless in Seattle without a fear, Mr. Holland's Opus and Awakenings, which all feature characters with different disabilities.

The Wheel Chair Cross-Campus Marathon was a massive hit. People who were not physically disabled had to maneuver around campus in wheelchairs and face different forms of being on the scene.

Martha Buda, director of Disability Access Services, said she was happy with the amount of participation in the activities and expected more this year.

"We're very pleased with the amount of people who came out," Buda said. "This was the first year we had a marathon."

Buda gives over the rules of the Wheel Chair Cross-Campus Marathon that started in the University in position to see the things that were going on," Buda said. "Some people who came and you would have never otherwise come through the O-Center.

On South Campus, Awakenings activities took place in the Murfill lobby. Members of the Student Council for Exceptional Children on disability simulation.

hitting the curve of the disk.

In the women's division, there was also a point for the match that would win the match in high school.

"I just try to concentrate on the things that make me comfortable.

Haudenloth is one of the best centers for beginners because it's short and easy. It's where most of the disc golfers begin back in the 80's. Most St. Louis women are used to starting there and there is one course that the disc golfers should be wary of—Blackbird Park in Flordell.

"Blackbird Park is definitely the toughest in St. Louis," Buda said. "It has more holes, but it feels like 18. It has intense hills, intense distance and intense wind factors. It has it all." Disc golf is going in popularity, especially with younger people because it's relatively inexpensive to play. The disc cost about $10, and the course are free to play.

"The USGA, St. Louis Recs, Department is getting into the act. They are hosting the commuter disc golf tournaments from April 14 through April 17. Rec-sports will have a disc and a maximum.

You can get involved in disc golf call Gateway Disc Golf Sports at (314) 770-1982. Another way to go is to play solo. "It's not difficult to participate," Buda said. "Just show up at the courses. Why I would suggest the beginner, though, is to work while you're before denominator. That will save you a lot of frustration."
