Impalement discussed, rejected at SGA meeting

BY JOHN RENAUD

A UM-St. Louis student read an open letter to Student Government Association President Jim Avery at Thursday’s SGA meeting, getting off a prepared discussion of his presidency.

Resolved Harris said she was urging rain marijuana laws for the city of Avery’s students, anti-student, and administration to submit to the organization to have an opportunity to make more for transportation and to secure our organization and our community.

Student Body President Keith Luedtke said the senate would have a mandatory meeting to maintain the integrity of the organization.

Other senators said that they were not fearful for the purpose of people, who were not even a part of the senate. After Avery read his letter, Luedtke said he had no idea what was going on. "I felt like I'm being punished. The individuals involved should be.

The administration emphasized that the sanctions should not be viewed simply as a prophylactic. "This is the membership of senate to use the senate as an opportunity to have an open forum and raise issues, including the one that is not in the student body and the organization," Luedtke said.

"I know one time they had a meeting and the president had a disagreement. ... You are not too much for grammar and you are doing the students as the injunction in the process," Avery read at the meeting. "We are a university and are not afraid to be the voice for the students in the senate. Avery spoke in the meeting. Avery said an emergency deadline his deadline after the meeting had advanced.

How to Land Your Dream Internship (Even the One You Didn't Know existed)

If you're serious about your career, even just an intern, it may be time to focus on finding a summer internship. Following are some tips about how to land one, as well as some of today's hottest industries like media, entertainment, fashion and high-tech, that likely don't recruit on campus.

WHAT TRAINS YOU?

After the first question you might think of when planning your career experience is: "What trainings do you need to do to land an internship?" This is the most important question and what job hunters get wrong. "Trainings" are different from "courses".

Samer Hamadeh, President and CEO of 360Careers.com and co-author of "America's Top Internships" and "The Internship Bible: two of the most useful books on the subject, take his advice and ask yourself some questions. Do you spend a lot of time listening to music and going to concerts? Maybe you should check out a local radio station, or a music recording company, or a music publishing company. Are you a devoted athlete? Then you might want to contact a professional sports company, or a fitness magazine, or a sports magazine.

CHECK IT OUT.

Below are key resources for your internship hunt, including specific listings for openings by company, industry and location.

New low in student interest in senate

The Issue: Campus student senate elections are nearing and there seems to be an alarmingly low number of applicants.

We Suggest: Students should take an interest in the University and show some participation.

So what do you think?

Let us hear from you on any issue in a letter to the editor.

Our Opinion

Student apathy may cause reduced representation

I am writing in response to the recent turn of events in the campus senate. I am diagnosed with talk of reducing student senate seats, and I don’t know who to blame. I do expect that the students face losing seats because quite a few of them have been absent from meetings. The reason I am upset is because I would be happy to serve and attend every meeting to ensure that all of our students get fair representation, and I am sure there are other students who feel the same.

I am further upset, however, because even if I was on the senate, I probably wouldn’t be heard. I think it is time for some changes. We need to find student senators who will attend all of the meetings. If we can find students who will attend, maybe the faculty senators will take the student senators seriously. Maybe then the student body will get the fair representation we currently lack.

Waiting for Tony: the search for a campus friend

There’s a famous play entitled Waiting for Godot, and the whole story revolves around two individuals waiting for Godot (God), who never comes. They never give up hope and feel that one day he will come. I have good arms for hugging and I never judge others. I have always felt that you can’t complain about expectations when you meet someone and just click. Luckily, I do have my best friends within the UN-St. Louis community.

I am further upset, however, because even if I was on the senate, I probably wouldn’t be heard. I think it is time for some changes. Homecoming rout puts Riverwomen back on track

by Ken Durkin

It took two tough losses for the Riverwomen to get back on track. Thursday they showed they were back as they rolled over Indianapolis 49-16.

The Riverwomen made it a point to end in a strong note in conference play. They had lost their previous two games by double digit differences.

A major key for the Riverwomen against Indianapolis was the strong defensive effort by UM-St. Louis. Indianapolis had the lead over 21 times. The Greyhounds were also held to a dismal 32 percent shooting percentage, and were held to 19 percent from 3-point range.

The Riverwomen shot 45 percent from the field and 43 percent from 3-point range. The difference in team shooting was the difference in the game.

Lindsay Bestfell led in the net for the Riverwomen soaring off the bench. She had a game high 26 points which she scored mostly going to 6-for-12 from the 3-point arch. She also tied Tawanda Daniel for the team high with seven rebounds.

Sweeping the wealth of points wasn't a problem for the Riverwomen. Twos led players scored in the net.

Season marks team's first GLVC tourney birth in five years

by Ken Durkin

The Riverwomen, the pitch, seed will play SIU-Edwardsville, the third seed, in their first round game as men on Wednesday in Evansville, IN.

The winter of that game will face the winner of the Bellarmine Saint Joseph's tourney today. The final will be held on Saturday.

Rivemen finish season with hope for the future

by Dave Kinworthy

The men's basketball team lost their final game of the year against Northern Kentucky, but the team has good prospects and looks to be headed in the right direction with its abandonment of the 3-point shot.

Denny Kelly and Jason Pfillman will both return, the Rivemen next season. The two of them, minus their injured players past few weeks, have been assets to the Rivemen.

The Rivemen has some positive things come out of this season. Although UM-St. Louis won, it is certain players have showed heart and dedication to the team throughout the year.

Good Greg Rose became a true leader on the floor this season. He was vocal to his teammates and showed leadership abilities. He was the Rivemen's go-to guy in the clutch and showed by making several double digit scoring nights.

Forward Keshon Johnson played with great enthusiasm in the season. He was a force in the middle for the Rivemen and led them in overall rebounds. He also showed many double double nights.

The Rivemen's squad may not look on in old form of winning ways, but the team and their courageous efforts on the court cannot be underestimated.

The Rivemen may be a sub .500 team this season, but the future holds well for UM-St. Louis.

The Rivemen pressure is about to begin and certain names have caught my eye in this tourney. One is...here is the rest of the season.

The Cardinals have made drastic improvements in the middle of their defense, scoring spots at shooting and in second base. The addition of Edgar Ramirez and Carlos Berrios will only help solidly the Cardinals defense. With Eric Girvin driving the Cardinal another home run, Mark McCuen will not score at this class types.

The Bears have acquired former Cardinal Brian Jordan to help a primarily left handed batting team. That pitching stuff when done, as such, will will roll on to the top in the league.

Look for the Houston Aces to battle the Cardinals in the Central Division, due to their addition of three hard hitters from Kansas. We will only keep the Cardinals in the top two in the league.

Document asks system to respect faculty input, addresses concerns about executive order 6A

The Senate approved a resolution last week intended to promote faculty involvement in future decisions about policy affecting tenure.

Renee Connett, chairperson of the senate committee on appointments, tenure, and promotion, and president of the division of counseling, said the resolution was intended to increase participation of the system in the selection of members of the senate.

The order, which dealt with tenure policy, was implemented by George Ruest, the former UM system president. It has been the system policy since 1992, but according to William Connelly, tenure member and professor of mathematics and computer science, it has only been implemented on the UM-Columbia campus.

Connett said the dispute between system and University policy had been discovered when the Nursing Department, in preparing their cases for tenure and promotion, consulted the system policy posted on the World Wide Web.

Connett said there are concerns about the order itself and the way it was passed. He said one major change the order made in review policy was permitting candidates who had been rejected by their department to reapply for positions.

The system UM-St. Louis policy, if a department revisits a candidate, the person had the option of appealing on the basis of procedural grounds, such as rectire or other bias, but the opinion of the faculty members about the quality of the candidate's work would not be questioned. If that appeal failed, the candidate would not be promoted. Under the system policy, candidates may be promoted with and without the positive recommendation of their department.

Connett said he disagreed with the idea of promoting candidates against the recommendation of their own department.

"If you have a situation where potentially a department could vote against a person unanimously and still they would have to prepare a document to send forward for this person to be promoted," Connett said.

Connett said he supported the idea of the resolution, which he said to pass the faculty in order to examine Order 6A as a means of promoting order in the University of Missouri system.

The resolution notes that the system regulations governing tenure are reviewed on a regular basis and that the executive order was passed without adequate input from UM-St. Louis faculty and that the affected professors have gone on impact on the University.

"It goes on to resolve that the Senate ask the University of Missouri Interim Faculty Council to request that the University of Missouri system administration will fully comply with the faculty and seek the approval of the Faculty of the University of Missouri (through its representative bodies) regarding any proposed changes of regulations, policy, or procedure pertaining to appointments, tenure, and/or promotion of faculty members," Connett said.

Connett said the language of the resolution needed to be strengthened.

"I don't see it as politics; it goes on saying you would please ask this person to maybe ask this person to please not kick us again, which I find demeaning and..." Connett said.

Connett said he noticed faculty input on tenure policy decisions as a right, not something to be begged for.

Connett said he felt the resolution was strong and had been worded very appropriately.

"I'm not sure how it could be worded any stronger than this," Connett said.

For the first time, a law student at the University of Missouri's law school has been passed for the bar exam.

More involved students who I've talked to are like that. Again, and again, our campus' been seen as a sense of apathy, eager leaders befuddled by a lack of eager people to lead. So that all the work themselves - they get frustrated, give up and quit saying one more thing is going to be done.

The end result is not a refection of their environment and while it would be easy to criticize a lack of leaders, what are the students are doing is an additional avenue that allows students to engage themselves in a committee to make suggestions.

In the end, leaders are often the reflection of their environment and while it would be easy to criticize a lack of leaders, what are the students are doing is an additional avenue that allows students to engage themselves in a committee to make suggestions.

Connett said he was pleased that the senate had not been involved in the decision last year.
