This year on election day, November 7, 2000, nearly 600,000 area students in grades K-12 will be going to the polls to cast their votes. No, the computer has not been amended to lower the voting age to four; these students will be participating in a program called "Kids Voting." In order for "Kids Voting" to be successful, volunteers are needed to assist.

T he staff of the "St. Louis Review" is very much in favor of both a presidential and state election this year. The first week of October is a busy one for political activity. The review is appreciative of all efforts to provide voters with the information they need to make wise choices.

The Review's political editor, Michael Itatani, said that "Radiant Space" is an opportunity for people to see the power of art, but that something else lingers just below the surface.

"It is about this kind of dual nature we live in the body, in our voices and in our relationships, in our community and in the manner our actions," Itatani said.

Sandy O'Rourke is the Executive Director of the St. Louis area "Kids Voting" program. "We are the ones to blame if we promise ourselves as an intermediary between these two atomic bombMC through kids," O'Rourke said.

"Kids Voting" is a non-partisan, non-profit organization. Its goal is to encourage children to participate in elections in a ten-week curriculum, and teach the students how to vote. The program, which began in 1988, has had a record issue of 157,000 in Missouri this year - an increase of 10 years. In 1998, this program has been a reality of dual nature, according to "Radiant Space" editor, Thomas Jefferson Greenblatt, said that "Radiant Space" is about being an artist.

Going into the work, Itatani said, "I am not sure about the future, but I do know that it will work because I have been working with these artists for a long time to make a show work.

Editorial

In recent weeks, I have been working hard to improve my English proficiency. As I was about to write this editorial, I was surprised to find that my writing was extraordinary! I am now an expert at what I do, and I can do it without any trouble. I am happy in this position and offer my services for the low fee of $300. However, ask me about any change that will affect the college.

If you have any questions, please ask me about any change that will affect the college. I can be reached at the editor-in-chief, who is also one of the previous editors-in-chief who was appointed to this position recently last month.

I know you, I know you well, but I am not looking for anything else. Special thanks to Steve’s Mom, we will continue to be the best at taking advantage of your superior paying skills for the 1000th issue. On a totally unrelated note, George Schenck, our passing game, and our own director of finance for the great game, they helped us get our “Fire” event coming next week. Thanks again.

American age limits deserve second look

I read in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch last week that the college will allow students to have the legal drinking age officially documented. Beneath one of the longest brewing proposals in American age, I am a bit curious about his opinions. In addition to his views, the school is about the subject of drinking (MADD) wasn't too impressed with that, and said it would oppose any such efforts. None of us is a big proponent of Board members for the first time - I’d rather have the Murphy’s - and I am definitely against drunk driving, too, but when it comes to age limits in this country, we’re long overdue for a better solution. I look at our policies. It makes sense to me, and just maybe you’ll change your mind.

Twenty-one is the legal age for purchasing and consuming alcohol in America, however, you can carry your vote to the elections of this country when you are 18. Being 18 also means, at least in the eyes of the U.S. Constitution, that you are legally mature enough to serve in the military and fight bad forces that destroy the safety of this community. However, for some reason, the college has decided to hold the post of the SGAS president, and to allow students to have the legal drinking age documented.

The SGAS president will have to make a decision that may affect many students, and all students should be aware of the upcoming change. This is something that I hope the new SGAS administration will remember.

LETTER

Student offers advice for new SGAS officers

A new set of Student Government Administration officers were elected last year by the student body. Here are some suggestions to them, so that their ideas and goals can be achieved.

First, do not belittle last year's SGAS. Yes, there were problems last year. However, many students worked hard to make sure that this year's SGAS would improve and produce many new ideas. SGAS has a constitutional responsibility to its students, and its leaders should be accountable to the students.

Second, you cannot throw out rules that you do not like. SGAS is a democratic organization, which means that its leaders have to be followed until they are changed. A question is needed in order to conduct official business. Organizations must have written procedures. Of all the rules under which SGAS must operate, only one is changeable.

Third, find a more convenient time for all SGAS officers to be present at the meetings. Claims are held throughout the day on this campus. The SGAS president should hold the post of the SGAS board and yield attendance. The SGAS president should consider how many parts of the campus are open, so students could discuss things besides attending the SGAS meeting.

Finally, the proposed constitution amendment on Oct. 10 is not your enemy to be approved by the Assembly. There are still many changes that need to be made in order to have a constitution that will meet the needs of all students. I will bring forth a number of amendments at the next SGAS meeting, so that the proposed constitution reflects better all students' needs.

SGAS is a service to all students, not just the minority of students who write in editorials. We are living in a world of freedom, and if you consider that freedom is something that I hope the new SGAS administration will remember.

R-women beat No. 1 team

BY DAVE KINOWTHY

The 2000-2001 edition of UM-St. Louis volleyball was a team that was on a tear. The Riverwomen had started the season with a 17-2 record and were off to a great start in the GLVC. However, in the second game, they faced off against the University of Southern Indiana, who were ranked No. 1 in the nation. The game was a close one, but the Riverwomen pulled out a hard-fought victory, 15-13, 11-15, 15-13.

The win was a big confidence booster for the team, and they continued to roll, finishing the season with a record of 22-3 and claiming the GLVC championship.

Madness brings basketball into light

Dave Black is a rearview mirror, a signal device of mostly heavy music. But in the “Lo” era, Paul Drescher’s accompanist of Elect & in saxophone, and the lens Mesurter’s, ” both Tutt and Stephen Templar, the latter of whom has been for over a decade, have a track record of success that is both impressive and a testament to their ability to make music that is both heartfelt and meaningful. Dave Black is an artist who has a unique ability to connect with his audience and deliver a message that is both personal and universal. His music speaks to the human experience in a way that is both uplifting and inspiring. In “This Mesurter’s,” Tutt’s voice is deep, broody, and jazzy like the flow of the Euphrates river. Black’s performance blends into the back-ground while the story of Tutt’s voice provides variety over the same ground. So, lyrical and lyrical vocal modes make it work and it’s Big Band.

2. 3:10 to Yuma
3. The Golden Bowl
4. Billy Elliot
5. The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou
6. The Straight”

“Goya in Bordeaux,” directed by Luis Buñuel, is a critically acclaimed film that explores the themes of art, politics, and the effects of power. The film was shot in the late 1940s, and its depiction of the Spanish Civil War is both powerful and haunting.

In “Blowfish,” directed by Brian De Palma, a group of young filmmakers try to make a film about a serial killer. The film is a dark and twisted tale of the film industry’s sleazy underbelly.

“St. Louis Blues,” directed by John Ford, is a biographical drama about the life of the blues singer Bessie Smith. The film is a beautifully crafted piece of cinema that captures the essence of Smith’s life.

“Scream,” directed by Wes Craven, is a horror film that became a cultural phenomenon. The film is a terrifying and satisfying experience that has been enjoyed by audiences for over a decade.

“Three Billboards,” directed by Martin McDonagh, is a dark comedy that follows a mother on a mission to find her daughter. The film is a sharp and thought-provoking piece of cinema.

“Mystify,” directed by What a wonderful, easy on the ears musical that hails a child, problem-free, playing with the rock band of the future, Black and Blue. The movie moves on, his “Villain” (MTI) becomes a subversive, irreverent, brilliantly constructed film about music and love, about people who fall in love, or not, about the familiar world of the European Film Festival, the music, the people, the parties, the parties, the parties... The music was later released as part of the soundtrack for the film, and it was critically acclaimed.

The film was made in a small town in England, and it was a turning point for De Palma, who had been struggling to find his voice in Hollywood. The film was a critical and commercial success, and it established De Palma as a major player in the film industry.

The film is a terrifying and satisfying experience that has been enjoyed by audiences for over a decade.

The film is a sharp and thought-provoking piece of cinema.

The film was made in a small town in England, and it was a turning point for De Palma, who had been struggling to find his voice in Hollywood. The film was a critical and commercial success, and it established De Palma as a major player in the film industry.

The film was shot in the late 1940s, and its depiction of the Spanish Civil War is both powerful and haunting.

Cuban missile crisis brought world to brink of destruction

The Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union was a major concern during the second half of the 20th century. During this time, there were many instances of tension between the two superpowers, but the Cuban Missile Crisis in 1962 brought the world to the brink of nuclear war.

In the summer of 1962, the United States discovered that the Soviet Union was secretly placing nuclear missiles in Cuba, just off the coast of Florida. The United States demanded that the missiles be removed, and the Soviet Union refused. The situation escalated, with each side reinforcing its nuclear capabilities.

Eventually, a secret negotiation took place in Vienna, where both sides agreed to remove their missiles in exchange for the other side doing the same. The crisis was averted, but it served as a stark reminder of the dangers of nuclear proliferation.

SAMSUNG DIGITAL IMAGING

A laser printer for the price of an inkjet.

Cool. Just $199.

Now you can have your very own laser printer. Without hardly any ink at all. And at a cost that's less than half what you'd pay for an inkjet. Plus you have the option of using either refillable or OEM ink cartridges.

"I'm always surprised at how little ink the laser printer uses," said a small business owner. "And it's so quiet it doesn't disturb our employees."

"I've been using laser printers for years," said a local IT consultant. "But this one is the best I've ever used. It prints so fast and is so easy to use."

The laser printer is available now at all major retailers. Ask your local retailer for more information.

Gertes reflects on growth of UMSL history department

One in two countries encountered severe labor to teach the material we had prepared for the 10th edition. For the last five years we will present some of what didn't make it in.

by Tim Thompson

Linda Gerston is a professor of history at the University of Missouri at St. Louis.

She was born in Kansas City, Missouri, but grew up in Arlington, Virginia. While in Arlington, Gerston attended Robert Lee Elementary School. She also lived only one block from Robert D. Lee High School.

Gerston did her undergraduate work at Antioch College in Yellow Springs, Ohio, where she majored in United States history. After this, she went on to complete her graduate work at the University of Wisconsin at Madison—a university renowned college for historians. Gerston received a graduate teaching assistantship at Madison to help prepare Gerston for his time as a professor, but did have one drawback. "Students

The study involves a telephone interview (about 1 hour) plus two to four afternoon laboratory sessions (6-4:30 each). The program will measure effects of nicotine and alcohol on balance and eye movements, and on heart rate and blood pressure. To participate you must:

- be 21 - 25 years of age
- a current cigarette smoker
- a moderate "social" alcohol drinker in good health

You will be compensated for your time.

It was a cold winter night in Moscow, 1962. The United States was on the brink of nuclear war with the Soviet Union. The situation was tense, but it was a turning point in the Cold War.

The Cuban Missile Crisis brought the world to the brink of destruction. On October 22, 1962, after a series of meetings, Cuba and the United States agreed to remove their missiles. The crisis was averted, but it served as a stark reminder of the dangers of nuclear proliferation.

Winning Intermediate and Medium Range Nuclear Forces

The Central Intelligence Agency, under the direction of Nikita Khrushchev, was secretly moving troops to Cuba. The Soviet Union had stationed missiles in Cuba, just off the coast of Florida.

The United States became aware of the secret plans and set sail for Cuba. On October 22, 1962, President John F. Kennedy addressed the nation, stating that the United States would not negotiate with the Soviet Union.

Kennedy ordered a naval blockade of Cuba on October 22, 1962. The blockade was lifted after a series of meetings, and the crisis was averted.
