Chancellor Blaise Tielli announced on Tuesday that the Anheuser-Busch Foundation was doubling its contribution to the University of Missouri-St. Louis Performing Arts Center and, as a result, the total performance hall would be named in honor of the center.

"When we first launched the capital campaign for our Performing Arts Center three years ago, Anheuser-Busch Foundation was the first major donor with a pledge of $1 million," Tielli said. "Today, I am pleased to announce a second $1 million pledge from the Anheuser-Busch Foundation, making them the alpha and omega of the Performing Arts Center. Because of this generous gift, the magnificent Performing Arts Center in the future will be named in honor of Anheuser-Busch." Tielli also announced a donation of $3,000 from St. Louis' professional baseball team, the St. Louis Cardinals, to the center.

"It is a pleasure to hear the names of past and present contributors to UM-St. Louis, especially sports fans, that make up the St. Louis Cardinals," Tielli said.

In an interview during the fund drive, Tielli expressed pleasure at being able to inform students about the center's development.

"The University of Missouri-St. Louis is facing a fiscal crisis for various reasons, including a decline in enrollment," Tielli said. "But despite these challenges, Anheuser-Busch Foundation has once again stepped up to support the Performing Arts Center. Their generosity will help us continue our mission to provide a world-class facility for students and the community."

Penalty saves game
Riverwomen win last week's game with penalty kick in double overtime

by Dave Kinworthy

Although a lapse in the second half almost cost the Riverwomen the soccer team the game, a strong double-overtime effort ended in a penalty-kick goal by Lindsey Silvester, UM-St. Louis rebounded from a loss to Northern Kentucky University to improve their conference mark to 1-1.

"We had about 15-20 minutes straight when I think that they pretty much dominated and put a lot of pressure on us," said Head Coach Beth Goetz. "I think they are a very fast-breaking team and that is all it takes. Fortunately, we only gave up one goal and ended up having to fight to get that game back in, which is what I think we pretty much dominated that overtime.

The overtime penalty-kick goal was a result of some strong pressure from Lindsey Simmons and Lindsey Jones as the Indianapolis goalkeeper came out to make a play and left the goal wide open. The shot was taken by Simmonds, but at Indianapolis keeper player was then to block the ball down with her hands, creating an immediate red card and sending the Riverwomen with a penalty-kick goal.

We had the better of the play and I would like to think that we earned that win," Goetz said.

The Riverwomen were without goalkeeper Katie Hettinger due to personal commitments, but Meg Keenan stepped in and played a solid game, stopping 15 of 16 shots for her first victory of the season.

"Tactically late in the game and she had the position committed as she coaches a youth team," Goetz said. "They had bought plane tickets and the whole bit to take their team out of town."

The Riverwomen came out and attacked the first half, as they jumped ahead on a goal 14:54 into the contest on a corner kick from Lindsey Jones that slipped across the goal mouth, and Silvester was there to finish the play.

"It is always tempting occasionally as far as winning a game," Goetz said. "It builds a momentum, but it is exciting, but a lot of the credit goes to the defense and offense." Obviously, the credit goes to the defense for creating scoring opportunities, but keepers are not the only thing that is a problem that the Riverwomen have to work on.

After a past weekend, the Riverwomen took on St. Joseph's

Rivermen suffer loss

by Dave Kinworthy

After a first half that saw two halves of soccer with equal, attacking and defending roles, the UM-St. Louis men's soccer team ended up without a goal, losing their game to the Great LakesWestern Conference.

In the first game, UM-St. Louis trailed 2-0 at one point, but the Rivermen took the first game of the season to 3-3 plus the overtime, putting their season atmosphere into a 2-1 record this season and with brilliant performance from Lindsey Simmons and Lindsey Jones as the Indianapolis goalkeeper came out to make a play and left the goal wide open. The shot was taken by Simmonds, but at Indianapolis keeper player was then to block the ball down with her hands, creating an immediate red card and sending the Riverwomen with a penalty-kick goal.

The Riverwomen's volleyball team is grateful for one thing: to be playing your first home match. I was impressed with our teams' blocking.

"I think the guys made that it was one of those games where our first base was in our past," Head Coach Halcomb Najjar said. "We thought that it is the best of the bad and was going to go to the free play, and the two guys going to take it down, and that was the free play that we found."

One of the good answers is that we are going to continue to try to iron out the problems, and we must take advantage of any opportunities. During the second half of the game, with 2:00 remaining, Mountain was grateful to return home to a noisy crowd that helped up the Riverwomen onto victory.

"That should be a good game," Najjar said. "It was tough playing your first home match, I even impressed with our teams' blocking. I think we really shut out the other team offensively." In the second game of the match, the Riverwomen took command of the game, leading them to a 15-2 lead, they went to the second set in a row and came back to get the last set after two Duffner digs on the back and a couple quick kills on the offensive side to secure the game handily, 15-4.

In the first and final game that the Riverwomen swept to open their home season, the Riverwomen put the UMSL game out early with a 7-2 lead. The team had three consecutive losing streaks and now the whole bit to take their team out of town, and we are going to continue to try to iron out the problems, and we must take advantage of any opportunities.

Emancipation proclamation celebrates 138 years

United States history is blessed by an incredible amount of significant events. That is one reason the Civil War is so intriguing to study. The signing of the Declaration of Independence, the Revolutionary War, and the Great Depression are just a few examples of this. Of all the events in American history, the Civil War between the North and South remains one of the most significant. This conflict contained more than its fair share in tillS.

Between 1861 and 1865, nearly 800,000 young men would die horrorously on the field of battle in the bloodiest conflict in American history. Of those who survived, many were forever scarred by the carnage. The Civil War to restore the Union could not have been more symbolic of the event than the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation.

According to former President Abraham Lincoln, the Emancipation Proclamation was his proudest moment. It was an event that would land him in history books for generations to come. In fact, Lincoln’s presidency would never be discussed without the mention of the Emancipation Proclamation.

The Proclamation was issued on September 22, 1862, just a month after the Battle of Antietam. The purpose of the Proclamation was to free the slaves within the states that had seceded from the Union. It stated that those states would be then, thenceforward, and forever free. Lincoln did not free any slaves living in the border states, since they were not actually in rebellion against the United States at the time. Initially, he was unable to keep them free, thereby losing their support over to the Confederacy.

On January 1, 1863, the Emancipation Proclamation took effect. It was a moment when the bloodiest event in American history, the Civil War, might just end. Before the Union could make any type of statement on the abolition of slavery, the North would need to put a victory in the books. Otherwise, the statement wouldn’t be worth the paper it was printed on. On Sept. 17, 1862, Lincoln was finally awarded with the victory he so desperately needed. It came at Antietam Creek, now known as Sharpsburg, Md. On an unusually hot and humid afternoon, 45,000 Confederates under the command of Robert E. Lee were soundly defeated by 70,000 Northerners under the command of George B. McClellan, in the single bloodiest day in American history. When the guns fell silent and the smoke cleared, over 25,000 people had been killed or captured. It was an awful scene of unprecedented wreckage. The victory could have been declared if McClellan had freed the slaves as well as mustering any enemy. He did not, however. Consequently, he was able to successfully withdraw back into Virginia.

Despite this victory on the part of the Union, McClellan was able to use the Northern victory as a springboard to fear his Emancipation Proclamation. On the morning of Sept. 22, 1862, he declared that “All slaves within any state, or designated part of a state in rebellion with the United States, shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free.” In a very savvy political maneuver, Lincoln did not free any slaves living in the border states, since they were not actually in rebellion against the United States at the time. Initially, he was unable to keep them free, thereby losing their support over to the Confederacy.

First American woman in space visits UMSL physics students

by Marcia C. Gear

Last Tuesday, the Department of Physics and Astronomy hosted an informal colloquium with Dr. Sally Ride. Ride is the former astronaut who opened the door to space for women. At the invitation of the department, she dispelled the misconceptions about what it means to be in space.

Ride said, "The things that we think that looks like an explorer, is supposed to fly like an airplane, but it doesn't. It's any airplane anybody has ever flown before, or since. That is, as an airplane that returns to Earth's atmosphere at such 17,500 miles per hour, you're going twice the speed of sound from where it supposed to land, with absolutely no engines at all."

Ride was asked to describe the launch experience inside the cabin. She responded, "As you might expect, the physical sensations are impressive, but they are not as big as the psychological and emotional effect, realizing that this thing is going up."

She went on to describe the a few minutes of acceleration experienced equivalent to times the force of gravity or "weightless."

Ride also dispelled the misconception that from the cockpit of the shuttle as an astronaut you can see the whole earth. She said that the continuously thought of pictures of the earth was actually taken from the moon, which is about 250,000 miles away. The man's view is at about 100 miles above earth. Not only can we see the whole planet, we can't see the whole United States, she said. "We can't even see the whole east coast, but we've got a pretty good view.

Ride received a B.A. in English, B.S. in physics, M.S. in physics, and Ph.D. in physics all from Stanford University. She was the first American woman in space. She completed two space missions into space: one in 1983 and one in 1984. She retired from NASA in 1987 and now works in the faculty at the University of California at San Diego and is the director of the California Space Institute.

Ride also responded to the question of what it was like flying. "It's love."

"The best way to keep you sticker safe is to use common sense," Ride said.

Replacement permits could arrive in October, police say

by Sarah T. Clark

To date, 33 parking permits have been reported stolen according to Dennis Seibert, assistant director of University Police. An estimated one-fifth of those stolen were from the inside windows of cars that weren't properly secured.

Seibert said that many of the thefts happened because cars were unlocked in the parking garage. UMMS parking permits, which were distributed in August, are supposed to permanently adhere to the outside of the rear window, but because of faulty adhesive, they can easily be peeled off. The exact date the stickers were replaced is still unknown, but Seibert said that they expect to get the replacement stickers sometime in October.

Since the adhesive does not work properly, the manufacturer of the parking permits will replace the current stickers at no cost to the student. Seibert said that the police are planning to advertise around campus when the new stickers come out, and the students will be responsible for bringing in their old sticker, and replacing it with a new one. The cost for replacing a stolen sticker is $10. "The best way to keep your sticker safe is to use common sense," Seibert said.

Public parking permits, which are currently being accepted for students who will enroll in October, are $25. Supplies last. Participating sponsors are American and VISA. No cash will be accepted.

Commonwealth Cave, currently housed in a on-campus library on the Columbia campus. During the fall portion of the meeting, the Board awarded a contract to Steeper Industries, Inc. of Kansas City, Mo. to complete renovation work on three buildings located in the UMMC campus. The three facilities are the Laboratory Forest Building, the Chemical Storage Building, and the Laboratory Animal Center of the medical School. The total cost of these projects will come to just under $2 million.

Currently, the Resources and Planning Committee is considering changes to the strategic plan submitted by all four UM campuses. When this process is complete, UM President Manuel Pacheco will submit these revisions sometime in October.
