UMSL 10 of 13 in state in funding dollars

UM President Pacheco views UMSL as a "developing university," no changes seen in future

By Jack Grimm

Computers and e-commerce shopping tops the list of things to come.

In August of this year, 44 of the 50 members of the National Governor's Association (NGA), including Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad, signed a letter to Congress supporting the Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP), which if enacted into law, would ban states from taxing Internet sales.

Currently, e-commerce businesses are taxed in the same manner as which is not the case under the Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP). Under this legislation, the tax rate is set at zero percent, and states have no such tax. The NGAs support of this legislation is a major step forward in the battle to harmonize sales tax laws across the nation, according to Jack Grimm.

Conventional brick-and-mortar retailing still dominates the nation's economy, but it is clear that the Internet is becoming a major player in the marketplace. The Internet has provided consumers with a new way to purchase goods and services, and the ability to shop from the comfort of their homes. The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) was introduced in Congress in 2000 and has been reintroduced several times since then. The hope is that it will be passed into law and become a permanent part of the tax code.

President George W. Bush has made the Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) a priority of his administration. The President has repeatedly stated that the Internet is a vital part of the American economy and should not be subjected to unnecessary taxation. The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) will protect the Internet from unfair taxation, allowing it to continue to thrive.

The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) will provide a level playing field for online and brick-and-mortar retailers. It will ensure that the Internet is not burdened with taxes that are not levied on traditional retail sales. This will allow the Internet to continue to grow and contribute to the economy.

Without the Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP), the Internet would be subjected to unfair taxation, which would stifle its growth and development. The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) will ensure that the Internet is not subjected to such taxes, allowing it to continue to grow and thrive.

The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) is a critical piece of legislation that will protect the Internet from unfair taxation. It is a necessary step to ensure that the Internet remains a vital part of the American economy.

The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) is long overdue. It is time for Congress to pass this legislation and provide a level playing field for online and brick-and-mortar retailers. The Internet is a vital part of the American economy and should not be subjected to unfair taxation. The Internet Tax Freedom Act (STP) is a critical piece of legislation that will protect the Internet from unfair taxation.

In the aftermath: the good, the ugly, and the bad

It has been one month and four days since the attacks. The nation has been pulled apart from one side to the next. We will go to the movies or listen to music. We will be1 110 devering terror. It is a time to mourn, a time to celebrate. We will be1 10 d一站 to the memory of those who lost their lives. We will be1 10 d a time to remember.

Remembrance comes in many forms. It can be through speeches, songs, or prayers. It can be through silence, reflection, or tears. It can be through acts of kindness, such as paying it forward or helping those in need. It can be through remembering the lives lost, such as those in the Pentagon, in New York City, and in Shanksville, Pennsylvania.

There are many ways to remember. It can be through a moment of silence, a moment of reflection, or a moment of action. It can be through a speech, a song, or a poem. It can be through a gesture, a hug, or a smile.

Remembrance is a way to honor those who lost their lives. It is a way to show our respect and admiration for their sacrifice. It is a way to remember their lives and their legacy.

Truckers, CB, and dark lonely highways career through 'Joy Ride'

BY CATHARINE MARGULIES
MARQUES
A & E* E*ension

A dark, distant highway. A silent car with three young people. A big, eighteen-wheeler truck, close behind.

This setting sounds like the start of an urban legend, one of those late-night scary tales about something that happened to a friend of a friend's cousin. Indeed, 'Joy Ride' has many elements of an urban legend, as do most movies in the "scary flick" group of thrillers. 'Joy Ride' is not scary enough, thankfully, to be a true flick, but using the storyline--jumping in their seats is something that happened to a friend of a friend of a friend's cousin.

What makes this story different from other movies in the genre is the element of humor from Steve Zahn, and the focus on the diverse nature of the main characters. Concentrated Zahn specializes in off-the-wall characters and his impish, self-absorbed tunnel filler is a joy and delight as they come. You don't expect many laughs in this kind of movie, and the unexpected Fuller and his more brilliant brother Lewis create a different kind of humor that actually heightens the scary parts of the film. (Leelee Sobieski), a very talented actress, actually has little to do in her role as Velma, as her part is almost just a plot device, but she still manages to produce a very believable character.

The scary parts of the film, while well-done and effective in making you jump out of your seat, are much more conventional and cover well-played ground. An experienced, the villains seem powerful, all-knowing and ruthless, almost anything to shock them, but much of the action stops within the urban legend genre. Just don't look in the trunk.

If you like a scary movie with good entertainment value, this is a good one. The story is fully developed characters, and especially the delightful Steve Zahn, give this movie a little extra kick but the conventional nature of some of the movie will make you feel if you have seen many movies of this kind.

The Unification of Art and Science

In today's society, the fields or art and science are usually considered to be conflicting, but in actuality, they are not. Not long ago, comparing the two was considered a sign of ignorance. However, this is not the case anymore. Art and science, although different in nature, both play vital roles in society. Some may argue that these two fields are not compatible, but this isn't true. In fact, there are many instances where art and science work together to achieve a common goal.

One reason this is possible is that both fields have had a lot of expansion in recent years. In particular, the sciences have become more accessible to the average person, and art has become more diverse. Today, there are many opportunities for people to learn about both fields, and these opportunities have made it easier for people to see the similarities between them.

Another reason this is possible is that both fields have a lot of overlap. Art and science both deal with the exploration of the world around us, and both are concerned with the creation of beauty. In fact, many of the greatest works of art have been inspired by scientific discoveries, and many of the greatest scientific discoveries have been inspired by works of art.

Our current understanding of the universe is largely due to the work of scientists, and our appreciation of the beauty of the universe is largely due to the work of artists. The two fields have traditionally been seen as being in conflict, but this is not true. In fact, the two fields are essential to each other.

The Unification of Art and Science

In the current era, the fields of art and science have become more closely linked than ever before. This is due in part to the increasing recognition of the importance of creativity and innovation in both fields. The arts and sciences require a similar thinking process to make new discoveries. In both fields, there is a need for curiosity, the willingness to take risks, and the ability to think outside the box.

In art, there is a focus on the beauty and the aesthetics of a work, whereas in science, there is a focus on the truth and the accuracy of a work. However, both disciplines require a similar thinking process to achieve their goals. The arts and sciences also require a similar level of rigor and critical thinking. In both fields, there is a need for a deep understanding of the underlying concepts and principles, as well as the ability to apply these concepts and principles to new situations.

Monday Night Series discusses 'Real World'

Everyone knows that movies are not real, and yet, we all flock to the theaters for five hours of true excitement in a world that's never our own. From the moment we walk out of the theater, however, our conversation turns to the movie's plot, characters, heroes, and villains. We drop into our perceptions of the real world where we create individual stories that reflect our own states of mind.

Cliff Froehlich, executive director of DePaul's Peace and Justice Department, and former film reviewer for the Chicago Reader, discusses his thoughts with film fans at the DePaul Center for Peace and Justice, 2332 N. Lincoln Ave., Monday, Nov. 10, titled "The Role of Film."

"Film is a magic wand, mass medici­nals," Froehlich begins. "It teaches us more about our world than we think. We can see a president's point of view. We can. It can. It can be a reality that a life, advocate or question a social issue. It can be a simple idea, it can be an emotion. It can be a depiction of a story. The duty of a film critic is to attempt to come closest in the message being conveyed in the story."

"A film critic一定要 acknowledge what film is doing, not only what cinema­ rian people read reviews before they go to the movies. But I think it's more interesting to read the reviews after you see it, because that's when you can engage in this dialogue with the critic."

While more people go into a theater with very simple prior knowledge of what went into making the film, they usually have a wider range of knowledge on an array of subjects: adolescents, and Lubomirski—acting or­ ders for a film role. However, the most common response is: "I just want to see what movie is going to break the box office records."

"At the core, we're all telling sto­ ries," Froehlich said. "In addition to understanding the ideas and messages from the books, we look at the understanding of the director's and the actors' characters. It's a lot of the same text." Froehlich went on to explain that this includes the interpretation of the message coming across the screen, and whether or not the message is being conveyed in a clear way.

"If a certain film critic believes that film is doing in Chicago," Froehlich explained. "That's one thing. But what we're seeing is that the film industry is producing a lot of different films that are doing different things. It's a lot of the same text, I think."

"I'm not sure how it works. I'm not sure how I feel about it. I'm not sure how I feel about it. It's a lot of the same text."

Froehlich explained. "For instance, the movie "Rush Hour" was supposed to be a comedy. People who saw the movie thought it was a serious movie. People who saw the movie thought it was a comedy. It's a lot of the same text."

"I'm not sure how it works. I'm not sure how I feel about it. I'm not sure how I feel about it. It's a lot of the same text."
Chancellor Touhill was very direct in her testimonial Wednesday.

Chancellor Touhill pointed out that UM-St. Louis is a growing University which contributes to the "great potential" mentioned by UM President Pacheco.

"In terms of full-time equivalent, UM-St. Louis has grown more than any other University in the United States of America in appropriate ways, consistent with concerns for health and safety in the work environment, and tuition remission and health insurance," Touhill said.

The blood drive was sponsored by University Health Services, in cooperation with Gateway Community Blood Bank. The blood donors were thanked for their contribution.

"Your contribution translates to over 60 percent of the donations were walk-ins. A couple of donors were upset about the long lines, but the majority of the donors did not mind. It was an opportunity to do something to help in the wake of the recent terrorist attacks."
