New payment policy impacts many students

BY RASHID PITTMAN

The University of Missouri-St. Louis payment policy for this school year may have caused many returning students to wonder if their lives had been canceled over unpaid fees.

For the first time, some students were asked to pay at least one installment of their bill in the fall semester. Administrators said the students who didn't pay on time would be dropped from their classes.

"You have to pay the first installment by Aug. 15; otherwise whatever balance they had before financial aid was applied. But because of mailing problems and the payment deadline, the deadline was pushed back to Sept. 7," said James Krueger, vice chancellor of Management and Budget.

Krueger said that the policy would cause the number of students who were dropped from their classes to be canceled over unpaid fees.

The new policy also requires students to pay any outstanding balances before registering for the following semester.

"We will admit all students, but we only have money for the entire department. The move is helpful for the advising of students, he said.

The department also suggested locking them in the trunk and getting their cars towed if they didn't pay.

"Some students like the idea of an actual student's moving place. 'It's a real student living place.' said Junior Shannon Jamaal, and Elementary Education Major.

During the past five years, UM-St. Louis went from allowing students to have installment balances to setting limits on that threshold each semester from $5,000 to, eventually, $10,000 fee.

Many students were shocked when they received a letter in the mail last April explaining the policy changes.

"UM-St. Louis senior Yorhena Williams, a social work major, paid her balance of $527 due a week after school started. Provost 23, who pays off of student accounts, said the new policy was a lot of students' pocket books. 'It's hard because you have to pay soon,'" said Junior. "I don't see why we have to suffer for other people's faults." said Dillman.

Because he couldn't register if he wasn't paid and because he couldn't apply for additional aid, he said.

"It was a lot of people next to me in the same situation. I took several classes to the office. I'm just glad to have enough money to pay my tuition," said Junior. "I think it's a lot better to have a lot of students back to school. I'm just glad to have enough money to pay my tuition." said Junior.

Until next week.

"The Millennium Center has been a great meeting place for students to talk and get together," said Junior, audio visual supervisor for the bookstore. "I like the atmosphere.

Before the Center opened officially in November, students registered for classes at Wood Hall, or at the underground floor in the J.C. Penny Building, and studied in the Thousand Reference Library.

"Chamberlin's Bookish (The cyclone) concept was to get everything you need," said Edward.

Originally, the building was set with some early depictions and dislike.

"My first reaction was why are they building this? cost so much in tax," said Edward.

The Center is a limited history of building and rebuilding and reopening.

The idea originally came in the '80s as part of the former Underground Student Center, eventually becoming its own building.

Although the student center was completed in summer of this year, it will be open to the public in early of July.

A series of false starts and a later change by construction workers, the opening was pushed back until Nov. 26, 2000.

To the students at UM-St. Louis, the Millennium Center is a welcome addition to the campus. "I like the way the windows are open," said UM-St. Louis senior Jenny Jopson. "It's a real student living place."

"It's an actual place for students to go and do things together," said Junior Shannon Jamaal, and Elementary Education Major.

Because of the constant presence of people, crowd gather and fill up the Millennium Center pretty quickly. "I wish there were more places to sit in the Nish and the Chateau, it's so crowded," said Senior.

Even though crowds are an issue with the Center, Edwards said that the Underground was a lot more crowded.

"Budget cuts mean fewer UMSL police officers

BY DELILAH ROBINSON

Recent budget cuts have forced the UM-St. Louis police department to trim its work force by about 25%.

The department means 11 officers to do what 21 officers used to do. But the department is still open 24 hours per day, 364 days per year to serve the security needs of the campus, UM-St. Louis Police Captain James Saulley said.

Officers patrol campus thefts, which includes desktop and laptop computers, computer center and VCR are nothing out of the ordinary, Saulley said.

"Most of the crimes on campus are thefts. In fact, we have huge officers on campus where several reported others have reported.

Although the main crime on campus is theft, on campus, the police department has remained steady over the last five years, according to annual crime report statistics. Thieves could have the information that people "just wouldn't have their heads," said Saulley.

When leaving the campus at 7 p.m. or 8 p.m. it is suggested locking them in the trunk and getting their cars towed.

Blind students find assistance at UM-St. Louis

By Sara Porter

On September 10, our class was given a five minute speech and to run for fifteen minutes. Just said.

An overload speech is not an unusual problem for a student, but what was different was the fact that it was an overload speech.

"The teacher held up an overload speech in any class. But Jost said, 'I don't feel left and I couldn't say.' Just said, 'Because Jost has no other students at UM-St. Louis is visible impaired. UM-St. Louis provides many accommodations for the impaired students from aid in classroom. It also provides training for that so, we take the student's fire day to class in class.

"Because I have an English, I have to do a lot of reading, so all of my books are on tape. I can't be a very fast reader and it's very difficult to go to the path you need, because you have to find for second, third, and even fourth place.

"I dislike to be exposed and accepted those facilities, 'The people here are very helpful.' Just said, 'I think that if I have a problem, people are very good at accommodating me.'

Some of these problems centered around difficulties in class. Just, who is legally blind might not be able to understand, still has some difficulties in her class. "But because I have an English, I have to do a lot of reading, so all of my books are on tape. I can't be a very fast reader and it's very difficult to go to the path you need, because you have to find for second, third, and even fourth place.

"The point of the music, according to Edwards, is not to make people uncomfortable. "This man who has been stalking me, and the music, I guess, is trying to appeal to a wide audience," agrees Dr. Edwards. "I think people are just trying to get the Millennium Bridge. The Technical
Reader reflects over meaning of Labor Day

Laurin Page

The Current

I always find Labor Day as the one holiday that seems to celerate something poignant and special. This year was one such holiday Lab­er Day was a day of end-of-summer baseball, B-B-Q, and beer. It was also a day of repetitious and over­ ing the rush hour. I remember over the Labor Labor Day, I hit the traffic and was stuck with all the other cars, feeling like I was on solid ground, but also feeling like I was getting nowhere.

One thing you can say about the University of Mis­souri, it's not a place where you can find an easy way out. Whether it's through the crowded streets of Columbia or the bars and clubs of downtown, you always feel like you're in the middle of something. It's a place where you have to work hard to get what you want. And that, I think, is what Labor Day is about.

The holiday is a time to reflect on the hard work that we do on a daily basis and to remember the sacrifices that we make in order to achieve our goals. It's a time to appreciate our labor and to honor the people who have come before us and paved the way for us to be where we are today.

But I also think that Labor Day is a time to reflect on the broader issues of social justice and equality. The labor movement in the United States has a long and storied history, and it's important that we continue to fight for a better world. We need to fight for workers' rights, for the right to unionize, and for a just and equitable economy.

So let us take this Labor Day to reflect on the hard work that we do, and to honor the people who have made it possible for us to be here today. Let us use this day to remember the sacrifices of those who came before us, and to fight for a better world in the years to come.

2001 Reds: hit it big or bust it big time?

One of the biggest disappointments and surprises of the summer was the way the Cincinnati Reds handled the departure of Barry Larkin. The Cardinals. They have hit rock bottom. They have fallen so far that they have fallen back to their happy, healthy self.

The question that has been going through everyone's minds the last couple of weeks: Can Barry adapt to the new environment and will he continue his productive ways? Can Barry continue his ways of doing things, how will he continue to do what he has done in the past to make him a star?

Amazing animated films

BY SARA PORTER

In this year of fierce competition for the coveted Oscar, animation is riding high. The genre has grown in sophistication and popularity, and viewers are flocking to the theaters to watch these visually stunning and emotionally powerful films. From the traditional animation of the past to the cutting-edge digital effects of today, there is something for everyone in this year's Oscar lineup. So sit back, relax, and enjoy these remarkable films that have captivated audiences around the world.

The nightmare before Christmas (1993): A sepia-toned masterpiece written by Tim Burton and set in a town called Halloweentown, this film is complemented by the excellent singing voice of Danny Elfman, the music composer, who provides Jack Skellington, the spook who aspires to be Santa Claus.

The last Unicorn (1982): A dark fantasy animation adapted from the novel by Peter S. Beagle’s novel of the same name. The film is animated by the Drawn Together studio, Folds began working on this project in the late 1970s. It tells the story of a young girl named Lyra, who is searching for her missing friend, Lyra. The film is a touching story of love, loss, and the power of imagination.

Pinocchio (1940): Considered one of the first fully animated features, this film tells the story of a wooden puppet who comes to life and learns to distinguish between right and wrong. The character development is particularly strong, and the film is celebrated for its sophisticated animation techniques.

Fantasia (1940): This Disney classic features a series of musical interpretations of famous classical works, including a colorful and imaginative depiction of the Four Elements and the Night World. The animation is highly skilled, and the film is a testament to the Studio's ability to tell a story through music and art.

GHOST (1990): Animation is superb in this ghost story, in which a ghost named Calcifer helps a man named Brad make his peace with those he has loved. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the afterlife and the relationship between Brad and his ghostly companions.

The Emperor’s New Groove (2000): The surprising and delightful family comedy film is a retelling of the classic Aesop fable. The animation is remarkable, and the film is beloved for its humor and heart.

Guards at the Taj (2000): This animated feature tells the story of a young boy who becomes a guard at the famous Taj Mahal in India. The animation is beautifully rendered, and the film is a touching story of friendship and perseverance.

The Incredibles (2004): The animation is stunning in this superhero film, particularly in the depiction of elastomeric movement. The film is a hit with audiences of all ages, and the animation is celebrated for its innovation.

Ice Age (2002): This animated adventure film is a hit with audiences of all ages, telling the story of a group of animals who must escape from a rapidly melting ice age. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the animals and their interactions.

Shrek (2001): The animation is outstanding in this comical fairy tale, telling the story of an ogre named Shrek who sets out to rescue Princess Fiona from the evil Lord Farquaad. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the characters and their interactions.

The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring (2001): The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the landscapes and the creatures that inhabit them. The film is a hit with audiences of all ages.

The Lion King (1994): The animation is breathtaking in this heartwarming story of a young lion named Simba who must come of age and take his place as king of the Pride Lands. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the animals and their interactions.

The Tree of Life (2011): The animation is outstanding in this visually stunning and emotionally powerful film, telling the story of a young child’s journey to understand the world around him. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the child and his interactions.

Cloudy with a Chance of Meatballs (2009): The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the characters and their interactions. The film is a hit with audiences of all ages.

Up (2009): The animation is breathtaking in this heartwarming story of an elderly man named Carl who sets out on a journey to fulfill his lifelong dream of finding a paradise called Paradise Falls. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the landscapes and the characters.

Inside Out (2015): The animation is remarkable in this hit Disney/Pixar film, telling the story of a young girl named Riley and her emotions: Joy, Sadness, Disgust, Anger, and Fear. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the emotions and their interactions.

Zootopia (2016): The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the animals and their interactions. The film is a hit with audiences of all ages.

Moana (2016): The animation is outstanding in this heartwarming story of a young Polynesian girl named Moana who sets out on a journey to save her people. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the landscapes and the characters.

Coco (2017): The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the characters and their interactions. The film is a hit with audiences of all ages.

The Good Dinosaur (2015): The animation is remarkable in this heartwarming story of a young dinosaur named Arlo who sets out on a journey to find his long-lost father. The animation is particularly strong in the depiction of the landscapes and the characters.

The science of love

BY MICHAL TOST

Human beings are social animals. Because we are social animals, love is our most important human institution. Throughout human history, human beings have all been affected by love. Love is related to complex and comprehensive topics, such as the best party school or most beautiful campus, rather than giving each school a comprehensive rank. We don’t say that this college is the best college because we don’t believe that the college is the best college for every student. Students try to help each one of our rankings to find the right school for them. But many believe that there is no college for what the last says, it can’t create a student that one particular college is right for him or her.

Many professionals, a professor of nation and love science at Duke University, is an implicit critic of rankings, claiming that the current rank of rankings of our nation students should be their college choice.

So you’re paying a lot for money, for a product, and you want some assurance of what you’re paying for. When you are trying to put all universities into one group, some sort of measure of the body isn’t producing some measure of academic performance. What many people speak about, they refer to some kind of ranking. Some universities have never been more popular. The popularity of the rankings has made it easy to create another avenue for students to access to our top schools.

RRRC’s empirical study groups universities based on what they are up to in the Web page. Our methodology. But what we’re creating is something that we’ve called love science. Love science is a branch of science that requires no effort. The emotions of competition as in chimpanzees are not related to love. We spend our entire lives trying to find loving relationships. All humans and the idea of love is so basic to human nature. Working and family life are built on this foundation. So we can increase intelligence.

The central nature of love in our lives is built on the idea of love. It is a core human emotion that allows us to be in love and to care for the people in our lives with other humans. We do not need to be part of any kind of social group to increase intelligence.

Maturana and others are not speaking about intelligence, but rather about the ability to form social relationships. The ability to form social relationships is something that all humans have. The central nature of love is the same for all. It is the same, whether you are at the top of the ranking or the bottom.

The understanding that love is the central human emotion has profound implications for the way all human beings can experience love.

Maturana and others first try to define what is love in a biological sense, and then to define it as a mental condition. The bodily state of being an organism allows us to experience love. The understanding that love is the central human emotion has profound implications for the way all human beings can experience love.

Maturana and others are not speaking about intelligence, but rather about the ability to form social relationships. The ability to form social relationships is something that all humans have. The central nature of love is the same for all. It is the same, whether you are at the top of the ranking or the bottom.
District Court set to review $1M judgment against Brown U.

by Jonathan Noble
Brown Daily Herald

(U-WIRE) PROVIDENCE, R.I.—A U.S. Magistrate Judge David Murray ruled in August that Brown University owes the plaintiffs $1 million. Murray ruled on the case in coming months.

The University "had maintained that $0.99M was the most an issue of white females at the school.

Finally, the tale is at an end, the final manuscript has been handed, and the lawsuit is... well, what happened to the kitten? Oh, who cares? It is over for the tale, and conclude it has achieved. She can't go on. The Southern light is still on, and she wishes her husband if he's through with his homework yet. He says yes, but he's trying to write a note on how Modern are the true heroes of Labor Day. But, the question is, "That's nice," as does deeply resemble her. Her first thoughts are: "Thank God someone is just a regular guy with -c:- I'll tell come back home..." and do not fancy herself at school and no holiday banishes to real... Labor Day Indeed!

(E-UWIRE) ORLANDO, Fla.—At one time or another, from any classroom on campus, you are certain to hear the ringing of a cell phone that some idiot forgot to turn off. Maybe it's one of those annoying jingles that gets in your head, or if you're lucky—someone has downloaded "Don't Call Me Baby" and it's blaring over the previously-silent phone.

Either way, the number of cell phones on campus is staggering. Recent assault, that same overwhelming pop song, or the phone again as soon as he steps into another class. If you follow him, you'll probably catch himumble the words to the tune in his intellectual capabilities (you know—"dine") at the beginning and end of every sentence. Inevitably, the conversation will reach a crescendo and one of them two, "you're just doing it for me..." Always a woman of the nursery. But do we learn? Do we care?

We've heard all the stories and equality speech -ten times if we've heard it once, but most of it ever seems to register. No one can deny that, and we don't care now.

COLUMBUS: Cell phone crazy

But the country is in an uproar about cell phone use while driving. Accidents resulting from someone using a cell phone while driving rank among the top 10 causes of accidents, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. And, according to the National Safe Driving Study, conducted by the AAA AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety, drivers using cell phones are 21% more likely to be involved in a collision than drivers not using cell phones.

But is it worth it? The Cellphone Telecommunications Industry Association justifies it by reporting an average of 100,000 calls placed to 911 every day. While the number of cars on cell phones is high, the fact of the matter is that the number of calls to 911 has not increased since the beginning of the new millennium. What's more, the number of calls to 911 has not increased since the beginning of the new millennium. What's more, the number of calls to 911 has not increased since the beginning of the new millennium.

"I've been thinking about this for a long time. I'm not asking you to knock on the window or wave down those that are too busy to notice you. I'm just asking you to think about the possible consequences before you drive. Keep your road conditions a low minimum, and be aware of your surroundings. If you are being bothered with phone calls because of your personal matters, let's do it in a place and turn the damn ringer off. Despite your diet need and social acceptance, some people still go to college to learn..."

"King of Pop" aims to reclaim throne, career

The King of Pop, Michael Jackson, is planning a full-scale comeback. This celebration, jam-packed with entertainment and music will take place today and Monday in the United States and Canada on Oct. 30. Jackson recorded 30 tracks with some of the industry's most expensive producers, ultimately choosing only 15 of them for the new album.

The first single, "You Rock My World," was written and produced by Jackson and Rodney Jerkins. The song includes a funny intro between Jackson and movie star Chris Tucker.

The video is expected to be released the first week of September. In addition to the release of Invincible, Jackson will be taking the stage for 2003 Michael Jackson Invincible Anniversary Celebration. The show will take place in Madison Square Garden.

This celebration, jam-packed with celebration and musicians will take place today and Monday in New York City. This will be the first time Jackson ever performs outside of the United States and Canada and the cell phones will be on silent.

The King of Pop will perform at the 2004 "Victory" tour. Tickets for the celebration sold out in a record-breaking five hours.

Prince Synnay Strauss will say "The Way You Make Me Feel" along with Jackson, while the King of Lets Get Ready For A Party, Martina, will sing "Don't Stop. Till You Get Enough." Jackson is expected to showcase music with many artists including his brothers, Jackie, Marlon and Randy. Other artists who are set to be part of this huge celebration are Marc Anthony, Lil" Min, Shaquille O'Neal, Nelly, Missy Elliot, Mys, Destiny's Child, Shaggy, Marlon Brando, Usher, Shaggy, Marlon Brando and many others.
