SGA election campaign begins

Vote to be held online through UMSL website on April 15, 16

This year’s Student Government Association elections are just around the corner. The one change in this year’s election is that students can vote online at the UMSL-St. Louis homepage. The voting will be from anywhere that has Internet access.

“I think it will be just like the horserace elections,” Ornith Montague, acting director of Student Life said. “From the University homepage students will be able to vote their McMaster ID and password to vote.”

Candidates will be able to vote from anywhere that has Internet access, there is also expected to be a few computers in the University Student Center and the MUSC blocked off specifically for voting. The online voting occurs for voting from anywhere that has Internet access.

With the online vote the SGA president, vice-president and comptroller will be elected for 2005-2006 school year.

According to Montague, these positions are elected by the student body because they are the paid positions for student government.

“SGA candidates were able to begin campaigning April 10 and 15 and 16. The debate is being hosted by The Student Life and is open to all students, faculty and staff. Those who are interested are encouraged to email questions for candidates at current@jinx.umsl.edu.”

SGA: ‘No discrimination against sexual preference’

By Jason Granger and Becky Rouman

News Editor and Staff Writer

The Student Government Association recently passed a proposal resolution on sexual orientation. The resolution was introduced to amend the non-discrimination clause of the UM-St. Louis constitution.

There is nothing in the UM-St. Louis constitution that prevents sexual discrimination, homosexual or otherwise. Technically, when someone seeks to amend the constitution, a petition to the administration can address that issue.

For the past 5 years, SGA and other organizations around campus have proposed to the Board of Curators that a non-discrimination clause be included. Thus far, nothing has resulted from these efforts. The community has pushed for this, as small as it may seem in a grand context. However, it has taken years for its necessity to gain widespread recognition on campus.

Recently, the administration passed a proposal resolution on the issue, which is a part of the reason UM-St. Louis does not have a policy on the topic. The state was working on a policy to pass this law, which has gone through the House but has not officially passed at this point yet.

At time, I have felt the voice of the student government has not been listened to by the Board of Curators. I have felt that they have turned a deaf ear to this resolution.

Michael Rankins, Division of Counseling and Family Services, said: “We’ve heard their sentiment but we don’t feel that they have turned a deaf ear to it.”

Rankins said this is familiar territory on campus and in the community. Rankins said he felt they have never acted on it.

Some students have raised the issue for a long time that we need to adopt a policy,” said Joe Flees, United Nations. “A lot of campus have adopted policies saying that they don’t discriminate on the basis of non-sexual orientation.

SMU-St. Louis used to have a clause against sexual discrimination against sexual preference. After the four years in the UM System, the Board of Regents, Kansas City, St. Louis and Rolla, have removed it.

The UM System Board of Curators has met every year for the past couple years on the issue. They have not responded as to whether or not they will pass the article.

SGA’s decision has one student hopeful about the future: “I am cautiously optimistic that we will see some change in the Board of System Constitution.” Michael Rankins, Division of Counseling and Family Services, said: “I think UM-St. Louis needs to be a campus of inclusion.”

Rankins keeps his optimists with realistic concerns. Rankins is well aware of the Board of Curators’ past record.

“At time, I have felt the voice of the student government has not been listened to by the Board of Curators. I have felt that they have turned a deaf ear to this resolution,” Rankins said. “I was very pleased.”

Rankins also said that PRISM did not actively lobby for the passage of the resolution. Rankins said he had the political side of PRISM and they did not go to any members of the Board.

Rankins said he hoped the Board of Curators acts on this resolution in the near future. This new formalization of UM-St. Louis is needed.

Columbia, decided to consolidate non-discrimination clauses and sexual orientation was excluded from the revised policy.

“I personally feel that the student body knows this,” Rankins said. “If UMSL should get put together and take care of any issues that arise, every year,” Flees said. “We’ve been doing this for a long time and again.”

The wide variety of groups participating in the marches illustrated the broad range of groups opposed to the war.

Many families with children, even babies in strollers, were present in the crowd. The wall along the top sides of the leading edge of the Student Union was lined with flags of countries that opposed the U.S. military war in the U.N. Reflecting the flags, people of various nationalities and ethnic groups were represented in the crowd. A high school student walked alongside older adults as these gathered to listen to speakers from the St. Louis Institute of War coalition and other organizations.

Students protest war on Iraq in Forest Park

By Catherine Maness-Heiniken

Asst. Editor

It almost looked like early spring ranger戴上, with colorful flags, music, families with children and young people everywhere. But this crowd had gathered for a very serious purpose, to express their opinion on the war in Iraq.

UM-St. Louis students were among the many participants in the March 30 “The World Wars Peace” rally in Forest Park. Several large “Redner” marches, including a religious student march initiated at Washington University, converged on the World’s Fair Park in Forest Park. Over all the groups gathered the crowds started to disperse, the flag was lowered, and the music was over.

“I’m not sure what the future expects,” Rankins said. “I hope that any changes will be considered on our campus.”

Students from around the St. Louis area...
OUR OPINION

We can’t hire you. You like girls!

What qualities do you want in the next chancellor of UM-St. Louis? Hume? Why? Well-educated? Must be socially friendly? Warning: this may cause your hair to fall out. Make your list. Go ahead, this editorial will wait. Don’t, just don’t. Do you want sexual orientation of any sort on it? Probably not. Well, I won’t be silent about it. The entire UM System has certain regulations in The Current cannot choose not to hire someone because he is not heterosexual. Yes, that’s right. Someone in human resources of enrollment does not want to hire someone in diversity. According to the System’s non-discrimination clause, it is nothing wrong with that. Of course, homosexuals and bisexuals are not protected either.

But that is the point. Almost every other major university, the University of Missouri does not have a sexual orientation non-discrimination clause, nor does VU-St. Louis. It does have a sexual orientation non-discrimination clause but only on a case-by-case basis. That is, it does not specify that the University has failed to do such with the right of the civil rights movement through the years. Hume’s idea will use a sexual orientation non-discrimination clause for the System. That means that they should consider the University and uncles of public institutions. Unfortunately, the University’s mandate to hire a person because the University is left to decide if that person is heterosexual, but the decision of who is heterosexual falls to the University. It is meant to be from science and religious influences, and the ideas come directly from the Judaism.

Unfortunately, the Board will not be looking at the sexual orientation non-discrimination clause before the University hires a person because the University is left to decide it. Hopefully, however, the hiring process will not cause one applicant’s sexual orientation to make it. In my opinion, the University of Missouri update in hiring process. The student who major, only if the qualification can be considered for consideration in the hiring process. The faculty and gender cannot be considered, but not for the hiring process. In a modern society, any public institution that still claims such odd official ideas is nothing short of wrong.

THE ISSUE

Unlike most Universities and companies the size of the UM System, the UM System does not have a sexual orientation non-discrimination clause. In modern society, this is unacceptable and unbelievable. The time for change is now. We suggest the Board of Curators needs to affirm the students’, faculty’s, and staff’s rights that a sexual orientation non-discrimination clause be permanently added to the UM System’s constitution. So, what do you think?

Registration woes can be prevented.

For this entire past week I have noticed that there have been so many of you, did students wrangling around campuses carrying a telephone and wearing colorful bracelets and keeping time limiting their registration process after their next semester appointments. In the past, they have always offered and a sexual orientation non-discrimination clause before the University hires a person because the University is left to decide if that person is heterosexual, but the decision of who is heterosexual falls to the University. It is meant to be from science and religious influences, and the ideas come directly from the Judaism.

The female mind: the fairer sex - part 2

by STEPHANIE A. GRIFFITH
Editor-in-Chief

The Current

First, we were the curvy, bottom-heavy, rounder-than-round "female" body, a melting pot of different kinds of body types. But then the evolution of the female body was a complex journey, influenced by various factors. The female body has evolved to perform different functions, from reproduction to nourishing the young. The female mind, on the other hand, has developed a unique cognitive capacity, which has contributed to our success in science and technology.

The female mind is often perceived as emotional and intuitive, whereas the male mind is often seen as rational and analytical. This is a misconception, as both genders have the capacity for both types of thinking. The female mind is capable of logic and reasoning, just as the male mind can be emotional.

The female mind has also been shown to be more adept at multitasking and managing emotions. This is important in today's fast-paced world, where the ability to handle multiple tasks and maintain emotional control is crucial.

In conclusion, the female mind and the male mind are not inherently different. Both genders have the capacity for both rational and emotional thinking. The key is to recognize and value the unique strengths that each gender brings to the table.

Dear Editor,

SSO responds to editorial censorship: traditionally, the student voice is muzzled.

Dear Student Senator, I would like to express my concern regarding the censorship of the student voice in the latest issue of The Current. As a member of the student body, I feel it is important to have a platform to express our opinions and concerns. The censorship of student voices goes against the principles of democracy and free speech.

The student voice is an integral part of the academic community. It is through student voices that we can bring about change and make our voices heard. The censorship of student voices undermines the values of transparency and accountability.

I urge you to reconsider the decision to censor student voices and to ensure that our voices are heard and valued.

Thank you,

Revisiting the academic honor code

by MICHELLE LECLAIR

Features Editor

Cited for conduct which students are saying is under the "proximity category," said Patricia Parker, chairwoman of the Academic Honor Code Committee, from the "UM-St. Louis Bulletin." "It's a catchall for situations where there's a question of academic misconduct that has been submitted to the committee for investigation."

"This code of Student Conduct is essentially an honor code," said Miller. "It's not part of the academic code. It's therefore not part of the code of Student Conduct."

The University also requires professors to make a statement of expectation on each class sheet. Though it's not a requirement to be handed off to the next professor, following information on the very last class of the year, these are usually "submitted" to the professor who was teaching the course. Many professors do not have these statements. They are normally accessed from the official code.

At the bottom of Parker's refinery talk, the group met with each student who has been found guilty of violating the rules and who was inattentive to the code. Parker said that if a student is willing to change, they would be willing to look at it as a "little bit of an improvement."

"I think the honor code is an honor system. It's not a way of doing things," said Parker. "It's a way of doing things that we discuss."

The current system is a system of accountability, where students can be held accountable for their actions.

"I think the honor code is something that we need to discuss. It's not just about cheating," said Parker. "It's about respecting the rules and regulations of the institution."
Résumés abound at spring job fair

Additionally disturbing to him was the possibility that the code implied. Not only were students making a declaration of their own honesty each time they wrote the code, but they also had to watch who broke it. "I always knew exactly who cheated," he said, "I didn’t have to make that decision."

Suddenly carcinoma is as to whether the code was still in place and whether students were still required to write it on every test and assignment. While he disputed the explanation that she had attended the school between 1984 and 1973 and had not thought to ask, until now, he explained by saying one could "maintain their honor codes, although the requirement to inform on other students has been removed. It supplies students who are aware of certain actions by faculty and students, and is still not a sign that a pledge on their courses.”

According to Parker, there is no formal discussion in order to implement this type of honor code at UNC–Chapel Hill. Still, she believes the discussion itself is important. "I think discussions like this bring into people’s awareness that we have these expectations and the first that the student is aware of it," she said.

Some students, though they agree in theory, find such expectations impractical and difficult to meet. "I can see how it’s useful,” said David Bettoni, junior, education and history. "If you don’t do your own work, you don’t want someone else to take credit for it. But it’s not fair to expect everyone to do that. Usually people get help from friends." Parker believes that a lot of the work that students do is done "out of a desire for planning," especially with certain courses. "The work is not original ideas to history,” he explained. His method for avoiding alleged plagiarism comes from a tutor. He said, "He told me, "If it’s common sense, it’s not plagiarism,” but for anything else, facts or numbers had better be verifiable."

Students are also concerned with the hassle and redundancy of such a code. "It would be annoying," said Brittany Kirkland, sophomore, philosophy, "I wouldn’t be offended, but I wouldn’t want to do it. I would hope it would help people avoid cheating, but I don’t think the client anyway and just lie about it.

Other students seem to fall along the lines of straightforward, orJAkeled. “I already have a strict one (honor code) in the honors college,” said Liz Blumen, sophomore, graphic design, "It wouldn’t bother me, I’m used to it.” Blumen also had an honor code throughout high school.

Toni Guarino, sophomore, psychology and philosophy, was asked as a visitor. "I was for president because I like RHA. It is a transformation," said Guarino. "I want to get more accommodation into the buildings because I have worries about vacations. From what I’ve seen and understood over the last year, RHA grows every year. I want to help that growth continue. By next year, the dorms will probably be full, so RHA will have more room for growth with more people."

USML roller hockey team will compete in the National Championship tournament later this month

by Hank Burns

Sports Editor

Floating their regular-season schedule with a career batting average of .380, Matt Hendrich, the team's student representative, and the team is currently practicing for the upcoming tournament.

"Our division is at a very high level, so we don't want to underestimate our opponents as they are an unknown," Hendrich said. "But we have a feeling that some team(s) from across the country won't match up to our talent." Hendrich said. "It's not something you know until you actually get there and see how well from other teams are playing." From other division II programs, Hendrich said that the team had to get ready to compete with a good team. Hendrich continued, "The best team at that point is who that team is that we match up with.

A lot of guys don't want to play a couple of basketball league for a weekend," Hendrich said. "But the coach brought us to the table and we decided to finance the trip. That's what that hockey can get out of funding, especially that this year. We didn't have the table to the beginning of the next season when we paid our tuition. We came through in the big way.

Coming in second to SLU will be something from the base, Hendrick, Matt, Louis, has agreed to pay for the team's school and registration fees.

"Someone is one way to put it," Hendrich said. "We went against SLU. We had beaten them the night before in a game that we didn't know much because both of our names were going on the regions. We had beaten them before 5-3 and we had beaten them before in the season. So we go into that game knowing we can win this thing. We can beat those others.

Hendrich said and that despite the confidence, winning was not going to be easy for either team.

"It was just a low-scoring affair," Hendrich said. "Watching both sides was pretty unfair. At this point of the tournament, you really go for the offense. You're not going to be conservative. You can't be too conservative. It had to be whole the way. We scored a goal with under 30 seconds to go. It was huge. I thought it was going to be 1-0, 2-0. I thought that was the final was going to be 1-0."

The following, the Rivermen received a perfect the day of regulation play. SLU scored in the first and the game went onto overtime. SLU then scored another goal, winning the Great Plains Region Division II Championship.

After that point, SLU was able to be in a position to win the game. Hendrick said, "I feel very good." Hendrick said, "We should have even been in the overtime session. I knew I was in a matter of time before those guys got it away because they were not the best of the better. That time. We had guys like Will Round, who could've moved everybody else out of the way for everyone."

The team was hoping for revenge after their loss to SLU.

"Hopefully we'll be able to see and again I think we will," Hendrick said. "I feel I could have upset to see something like that happen."
UMSL faces double trouble at home

The UM-St. Louis men's tennis team dropped two conference matches on Saturday, falling 5-3 to Bellarmine and losing 5-4 in a tight match against Southern Indiana.

In the morning match, the Riverrnemen fell behind in doubles play and couldn't catch up in the singles matches. Bellarmine won the first doubles in a close matchup 9-8, and won the second doubles 8-2. UM-St. Louis got singles wins at the top two spots from Martin Kardos at one singles, winning 3-6, 6-3, 6-3, and at two singles from Matt Vaulkhard, winning 6-2, 6-4.

Against Southern Indiana, UM-St. Louis again fell behind early after dropping two of the three doubles matches. Matt Vaulkhard and Stephen Pobst teamed up for an 8-2 win at three doubles, but the Riverrnemen dropped a tight match at one doubles 8-6. UM-St. Louis made a charge in the singles matches, getting an injury default win at three singles, and then got wins from Martin Kardos at two singles 7-5, 6-3 and at five singles from Rajaan Saini 6-3, 6-2. USI would pull out the final two matches, winning both in three sets, to hold on for the 5-4 win.

CD REVIEW

The rejected reactonaries

Music Critic

Maybe losing isn’t so bad after all. America’s most notorious out of their trivial expectetns and created the uneasy yet unique album, “The Art of Losing.” My initial reaction to “The Art of Losing” was, “Finally, some neato groups in genre bands that don’t suck.” That sound is parallel to Green Day’s, with some ska and punk rock elements mixed in as “The Art of Losing” is the quartet’s second release and has been a monumental success for the group thus far.

The CD begins with the title track, which lyrically defines America’s Hi-Fi’s debut album. “If you need a job and you’re going to get a job and start growing old,” in their definition of American music, which they’re not about to succumb to. This song is one that you may have heard on your radio, as it is reaching across the country. The album itself is a journey through those demanding phases of life stories that have been put on by the group to prove to the world their style and power. In this way, the title of the album seems appropriately conceived from the message that the group is sending to their listeners. There is an evident rise and fall progression in all of the tracks on “The Art of Losing.” Each track contains a calming intro followed by famous rhythms. Songs go from slow rock ballads to raging punk choruses and repeat the process again, which makes for some interesting layers. The American Hi-Fi’s take a bare-fisted spin, filled with some heavy emotion into it, and then set it in a clear, I personally feel that the group constructs their songs, and I think other listeners will be just as pleased.

The band is full of musical talent with a mission on a mission to rock. Stanley Jordan, American Hi-Fi’s frontman, has so far in several alternative rock bands such as Veruca Salt and Letters to Cleo. The group has hardly come together to share their own feelings towards the female rock and make music like it. It seems to be working, and I think that this is only the beginning of a bigger surge for the American Hi-Fi’s.

“Art of Losing” is a brilliant compilation of heart-broken lyrics and wild rhythms. Five men dressed in all black stroll onto stage to prove their explosion. Four men dressed in all black were up in the Mooney Suzuki. Everyone was caught up in the seams with theatrical, raw energy. The Mooney Suzuki’s entry into modern music.

“Whenever the crowd goes crazy, the band goes crazy,” Tyler said. “It’s that simple. We have the crowd's energy and we use it to our advantage.”

Tyler filled me in on the motivation of American society, music and created their new album, “The Art of Losing.” Their sound is parallel to Green Day’s, with some ska and punk rock elements mixed in as “The Art of Losing” is the quartet’s second release and has been a monumental success for the group thus far.

Dear Editor:

The wording used in the article, how­ever, is not accurate. I refer to the piece dated May 1, 1994, which states, "...women equity in pay increases". It seems clear that women's equity in pay increases is a goal that needs to be addressed. Your determination is limited to the four words "women's equity in pay increases". It is important to clarify the misunderstanding of the term "women's equity in pay increases". It is not accurate to use the term "women's equity in pay increases" in the context of your letter.

Yours sincerely,
Carlos Madrid

It really

Believe it or not, when you leave, they're even appall you: the administration really doesn't want you to see that the Millennium Center is the coolest thing ever. Except for maybe Elvis impersonations on stage. We go there so often that all and us by

Dear Adam and Jason,

First of all, let me compliment you on the way you handled the letters from Jamie this time before last. We can all be a little sensitive at times, and as a woman, I know that you had a real treat about things. I hope the reader of those letters were not neglected, and that you are not cracking ourselves over to get women across the globe. I think you are great and was written to be a safer side to respect to Jamie's letters.

Anyway, I do have a problem that I would like to advise you on. My friends and I are regulars at the pizza place called The Big Bang. We go there regularly, and they serve us a pizza of which we go in love and we have a little thing with this pizza we call the "taIWash pizza". It is not a little thing. We love this pizza very much. Glad. My friend (I won't mention the name) and I arrived at the restaurant and the reception was very similar. You see, he was so into it, it was almost like a whole new experience. He went there because you told me that you thought I had better go. I don't know how important this is for those who follow our shows. It is /at all serious at times; sometimes his practice at home is lots of a mirror before going off to a wedding, but it always seems to tickle us all.

I don't know you or how this will make you feel about this, but I know that it is important to my mother, so it is something that makes us feel great. I have always been a big fan of the show and it always makes me feel that I am a part of it. I have seen the show many times and it is a show that I will always remember.

The Big Bang Groupie

Dear Groupie,

First we would like to take this time to thank you for your kind words about our previous controversy. We sincerely hope that Jamie took in what we had to say and has accepted our comment.

On this note, it's a fact: I don't like you, but I'll keep it a secret.
