University Program Board promotes student involvement

Expo Student Organization and Breakaway fall on August 22, from 11 a.m. to 11:30 p.m., hosted over 50 carnival-style booths set up in the north campus quadrangle of University of Missouri-St. Louis. Each booth represented a different organization at WM-St. Louis. The purpose of Expo is to help students learn about the different organizations on campus. The participating organizations ranged from sororities and fraternities to different department clubs and other student-run organizations.

In addition to visible information, students learning among the displays and talking to the representatives manning the booths were given everything from footballs to T-shirts to sunglasses.

Hosted by the University Program Board, the main goal of Expo was to help students realize that it's important to come to school for more than just academics.

Remodeled fitness center will debut this week

With the long anticipated opening of the new fitness center, exciting things are happening at the Mark Twain Athletic Building. Students are invited to come check out the changes and celebrate the grand reopening during the open house event on Monday, August 27 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The event will be sponsored by Coca-Cola and will include give-aways and refreshments.

Students may notice an improvement just by walking into the new space: the square footage of the fitness center has grown by approximately 75 percent due to the removal of the wall between the original fitness center and the old batting cage (which has been relocated to the gymnastics). This, combined with new lighting fixtures and clear glass window panes added to some of the walls, banish the old feelings of claustrophobia that students were unhappy with in the past.

Changes have been made regarding the available equipment as well. Some of the original Klausing machines remain in the fitness center but there are now additional 18 selectized Magni machines.

The original weight room that was located on the bottom floor has been remodeled for the exclusive use of the athletic department, with new offices and an athletes-only weight room.

Now a part of the total fitness center, the free weight equipment is in the area that used to house the batting cage. Included are brand new dumbbells ranging from five to 100 lbs., several kettle bells and two stations available for working with heavier weighted barbells and other equipment.

With the addition of six new top-of-the-line Woodway Treadmills, the cardio machines may just be the stars of the show. The machines are larger and more comfortable to use, with wider-spaced handrails and thicker belts. In addition to watching television programs, the large monitors can be used to track workouts over time and

Expo 15: Re-Domestic’ explores femininity

HAJI FLINTROP

The “Exposure 15: Re-Domestic’” exhibit features three female artists — Gina Alvarez, Heather Corley and Deb Douglas — whose pieces explore similar themes of domesticity, femininity and beauty in distinctive ways.

The exhibit opened on August 23 and will be open for viewing at University of Missouri-St. Louis’ Gallery 210 through September 29. The reception for “Exposure 15: Re-Domestic’” will be held on September 6 from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., along with the reception for the College of Fine Arts’ Faculty Jubilee Exhibition.

The pieces featured in “Exposure 15: Re-Domestic’” are all mixed-media works crafted by female artists. The similarities between the three artists' pieces, however, end there. Upon entering the room and scanning it with a cursory glance, the first impression is that there are three collections of very different artwork inexplicably set up in a single space.

The most gripping of the works on display, a piece by Gina Alvarez, is a series of bell jars housing various objects that are reminiscent of arts and crafts materials. There is a different object in each jar, and most have a unique, embelished stopper.

"By displaying all the organizations during the first week of school in a well-traveled part of UMSL's campus, we give students all the information at once," Deimel said. "It is extremely difficult to miss the Expo if you are on North Campus."

UM-St. Louis has gained a reputation for being a commuter school. Many students complain about the lack of social activities on campus, particularly in comparison to other universities across the country. The Expo event made it easier for students to approach organizations they may be interested in learning more about, which for new students is often a daunting task.

Many students at UM-St. Louis may not even be aware of how many clubs there are right here on campus. Even sweat fans of the University Fitness center get a grand total of 30 cardio machines, all of which have television monitors. The fitness center is open Monday through Thursday, from 6:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.; Friday from 6:30 a.m. to 7 p.m.; Saturday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.; and Sunday from 12 to 5 p.m.

Business department planning to build a new building

Construction of new business building is still a ways off

ANYA GLUSHKO
Staff Writer

The date of construction for the new Anheuser-Busch business building is still undecided. The College of Business Administration at University of Missouri-St. Louis has received nearly $15 million in cash and commitments. This adds up to roughly half of what the original budget demanded.

"The plan calls for a phase one that requires about $30 million," Keith Womer, Dean of the College of Business Administration, said. "The exact date for the start of the construction has yet to be determined, though it can be said with some certainty that it will not begin any sooner than 2013."

In the spring of 2012, Missouri legislators passed a bill permitting the state to match private giving on a one-to-one basis. The bill was signed by Governor Jay Nixon on July 5.

"Our hopes and dreams are that the state will fund [construction of the new business building] during the current legislative session," said Womer. "If that happens, we will be able to move almost immediately following that."

UM-St. Louis does not plan to give up fundraising. The university had been receiving an average of $7 million a year since the launch of the Gateway to Greatness Campaign in 2005 and expects to keep it up. "We will continue to try to raise funds for the building," Womer said. "...we are certainly looking at all other possible sources, but the amount that we have left to come up with is large enough that we almost surely will need government support."

A major donation to UM-St. Louis' College of Business Administration came from the Anheuser-Busch Company. Payments totaling $2.5 million were made over the last five years. The final payment was made this August. Business administration is the largest single major at UM-St. Louis. The second largest is accounting, UM-St. Louis' international business program has been ranked among the top 20 in the world for the last nine years.

"Business related majors are a very big part of the university," Womer said. "Our students graduate, live and work in St. Louis, so we are a major contributor to the St. Louis workforce."

AAUW recruits UMSL students for membership drive

The organization has a national membership of 150,000 and pursues women and girls through advocacy, education, philanthropy and research. After leaving the army, Cory Jones was left wondering where to go. He fled to a childhood mentor for career inspiration. "My basketball coach when I was growing up was a police officer, so after I got out of the army, I was like, 'Yeah, alright, they bring it. Why not?'" Jones said. Now with eight years in the force and is looked to as one of the safest campuses in the state.

Working at the UM-St. Louis police department is completely different from working on the street because the challenges here are more community-oriented," said Jones. "So if you don't like to go in, talk to people, say 'Hey, how are you doing?' and do the 'Nice to meet you, I'm Officer Jones, nice to meet you, I'm Officer Jones,' so on and so forth, and if you don't want to get out of your car, can be nice to people and ask them if they need help. I'm kind of a family-conscious campus cop and how we can address them, it's not the job for you."

Jones spent his first three years on the UM-St. Louis force working nights on campus, often patrolling the University Student apartments, Oak Hall and Maple Hills. He made a point of getting to know the students by selling candy, "I knew 70% of the students by name because I was there all the time, so if you walked from two to six or seven in the morning as a desk assistant, you knew who I was," said Jones. "You may even be trying to figure out, 'Hey man, where's Officer Jones? Because I'm talking asleep and it's his job to keep me awake at night."

Working as an UM - St. Louis police officer requires Jones' attendance in community policing and adds an aggregated sense of security for his family. "A candle loses nothing from lighting another candle," he said. He is working on getting his bachelor's degree to perfect his medical knowledge and skills. He is also planning a medical mission trip to Uganda in the summer of 2013 and is looking for volunteers from America. "There is nothing impossible, given the combination of determination and passion for one's goals, "Mugaya said. "Teamwork is a key virtue to the attainment of such goals in life."
Street violin rocks UMSL

ANYA GLUSHKO
Assistant News Editor

A violin performer walked onto the Blanche M. Touhill Lee Theater stage at the University of Missouri—St. Louis. He was wearing a typical college clothes—a pair of jeans, a simple black T-shirt and a bassine. But despite his casual dress, it became clear that he was not an amateur musician after he finished setting up his electronic systems and began to play.

On Thursday night, August 23, Josh Vietti of Southern California warmed up his audience with a kind welcome. He began by setting up a finely tuned one-to-one tune with the whole auditorium. "Hello, baby," he said as he began his classical legitimization.

Vietti noted the bow in his coiled hand for a moment before striking the violin and laying right into the driving melody.

"I really enjoyed it, especially the audience's participation," audience member Emily West, freshman, said.

The musician showed his impressive techniques as he picked strings with his fingers to make short, staccato notes and used the bow to produce long, legato sounds. With digital sound technology and multiple layers, Vietti sounded like a full band or even an orchestra.

Vietti's performance included a wide variety of musical styles such as classical, country, pop and hip-hop. Even the most sophisticated music lovers could find something to enjoy in the violin melody he played. Recently, Vietti has performed in four other states. He admitted that he is pretty worn out, but this did not affect the quality of his performance. He kept up the energetic spirit of the night by confessing that it was his second time in St. Louis and the only two things he remembered about it were the Budweiser factory and the band Wiz Khalifa. While performing Jay-Z's "Empire State of Mind," he joked around by suggesting changing "New York" to "St. Louis" in the song's lyrics.

Vietti encouraged UMSL students to practice the powerful beat. During his performance, students clapped their hands and stamped their feet in time with the driving melody.

"I think it was a really good experience," junior theater and dance, who did an impressive dance to the performance, said. "I think it was a really good experience for the audience," audience member Emily West, freshman, said.

The performance also included several famous tunes such as "All the Single Ladies," "Black and White," "A Thousand Miles" and many others. The songs were recaptured by singers from the very first chords. Though not originally written for this instrument, modern classics were professionally arranged and awarded very close to their prototypes.

"I like this song," Vietti confessed to the audience concerning one of the pop songs he played. The audience cheered in approval. "Have you ever heard it on the violin before?" he asked. The response was a clear "No."

Vietti also made the students part of his performance, actively engaging them in his music through beat boxing, singing and dancing.

"The show was awesome," Tony Kespie, junior, theater and dance, who did an impressive dance to the performance, said. "I think it was a really good experience for the audience," audience member Emily West, freshman, said.

"It was an amazing experience and an extremely good night," Vietti said.

To offset the loss of Musenfechter and Neutzling, the Tritons have signed nine players to National Letters of Intent.

Our Opinion: Is borrowing money to pay for college really worth it?

With today’s economy, rising educational costs and students taking on more debt to cover these costs, it is crucial to go to college if you have the means to do so. It will worth it for people to get saddled with what is comparable to a mortgage payment in student loans coming across their path. According to the National Center for Educational Statistics, college tuition for all institutions, both public and private, has increased to nearly $7,000 per year from $2,500 to $3,000 in 2010. Public institutions have less of an increase than private institutions, but in both cases, the cost of going to college is on the rise.

Taking four years to graduate with a degree is a big sacrifice for people, because they are missing out on valuable work experience. For the time people take to graduate, they already have four years on a new graduate in their chosen field. With the economy currently in such bad shape, graduates might be more steadfast for the jobs they seek. A company can hire someone with less of an education at a lower rate to save some money. This might not be the best thing for the company in the long run, but it does ease the burden on the budget.

The rate of unemployment seems to be influenced by the level of education, but what about pay? According to a study by the American Embassy in Japan that could work with my degree. There are some telling statistics out there. According to a study by the U.S. government, the Boren scholarship, which aims to increase the number of students taking on more debt to cover these costs, is a big sacrifice for people, because they are missing out on valuable work experience.
