Carnahan to Address Fellows at Leadership Academy Dinner

For most of us, becoming a U.S. Senator would be a momentous transition, requiring every ounce of focus and stamina.

All the more so for Jean Carnahan, who stepped into the position at one of the most difficult times in her life.

Carnahan will discuss her tenure as Missouri’s first female U.S. senator and her other roles in public policy at the 10th annual 21st Century Leadership Academy Keynote Dinner on Thursday, May 24.

“Sen. Carnahan has a unique story as a public servant,” said Dayna Stock, director of the 21st Century Leadership Academy.

“We’re delighted and honored to have her give the keynote address.”

The former U.S. senator was appointed to the post just weeks after her husband and son were killed in a plane crash.

She served in the role for two years before losing a close election.

The author of three books, Carnahan served eight years as Missouri’s First Lady and has long been an advocate for women, children, education and violence prevention.

The 21st Century Leadership Academy Keynote Dinner will be held at the Crowne Plaza hotel in Clayton.

The dinner is the culmination of a weeklong residential leadership academy attended by 36 college students from nine Missouri state universities, focusing on encouraging women’s participation in the public policy process. For more information about the dinner, contact the Institute at (314) 516-4727 or www.umsl.edu/~iwpl.

2007 Amethyst Award Winner Refuses to Take ‘No’ for an Answer

Chyanne Lockhart Cardarella didn’t just survive a difficult childhood, she flourished and has gone on to become a role model for others.

That’s just one of the reasons she was selected to receive the 2007 Amethyst Award. Chyanne will be presented with a $1,000 unrestricted cash award at the 21st Century Leadership Academy Keynote Dinner on May 24.

A 2003 Fellow from University of Central Missouri, Chyanne graduated in 2004, earning a degree in political science with concentrations in state government and environmental policy.

Even before graduation, Chyanne has used her leadership savvy to advocate for clean, renewable energy sources.

A leader in the drive for wind energy in Northwest Missouri, Chyanne works with the Missouri Department of Natural Resources and various environmental organizations, traveling to the State Capitol regularly.

Remembering Harriett Woods, 1927-2007

For the past decade, Harriett Woods set the stage at the 21st Century Leadership Academy, leading college students through the journey of American women in politics, inspiring them with her story, enlightening them to the challenges and barriers women faced, and helping them understand how far we’ve come.

She was a member of the Institute’s St. Louis Advisory board and was committed to the Institute’s mission to encourage women of all ages, walks of life and political views to step forward and take on policy making positions.

Harriett Woods served on local, statewide and national policy making boards. She also held legislative office in University City and the Missouri Senate, as well as being the first women elected statewide in Missouri in 1984.

In 1982, she was the first woman in Missouri nominated for the U.S. Senate and would have been the second woman elected to that body had she won. She went on to recruit and advise other women to run for the Senate, and recently went to Washington, DC to celebrate the swearing-in of Missouri’s first elected woman Senator.

In her role as President of the National Women’s Political Caucus (1991-95) she advocated for the appointment of women to cabinet level positions and led coalitions that helped Janet Reno and Madeline Albright break through the glass ceiling in Washington by becoming the first female Attorney General and Secretary of State, respectively.

“She will be remembered as a risk-taker who didn’t wait to be asked to lead. Her best legacy would be for many women to follow in her footsteps,” said Director Vivian Eveloff.
Women Break New Ground in Local Contests in Kansas City and St. Louis

Women were elected in record numbers to the governing bodies in the city of St. Louis and Kansas City, with women taking over the majority of the Kansas City City Council.

Kansas City’s first woman mayor, Kay Barnes, has led the way for women’s public service in Kansas City. She will leave office after eight years as the Kansas City Council has its first female majority in the city’s history. As of May 1 women comprise seven of the 12 council seats. The voters of Kansas City elected Sharon Sanders Brooks, Cindy Baker Circo, Melba Curls, Beth Gottstein, Cathy Jolly, and Jan Marcason March 27 as new members to the council. They will join incumbent Deb Hermann. Past city councils have had as many as five women (1991-95 and 1995-99).

Council members Bonnie Sue Cooper and Becky Schumacher did not seek re-election while incumbent Saundra McFadden-Weaver was defeated by Brooks.

Mayor Barnes began her public service in the late ’60s as a volunteer, and later as paid staff, for Cross-Lines Cooperative Council. She became one of two women elected to the Jackson County Legislature in 1974 and in 1979 was elected to the City Council. Newly elected Mark Funkhouser will take her place on May 1.

In St. Louis, 11 of the 28 members of the Board of Aldermen are women following the April 3 election, up from a previous high of ten.

Among the new alderwomen is Kacie Starr Triplett. At just 26 years old, Triplett will serve as the youngest person on the Board.

She credited her participation in the Institute’s Pipeline to Legislative Office program in 2004 with teaching her many helpful skills and tips to run a successful campaign.

Including Triplett, four candidates who attended or had their campaign managers attend the Sue Shear Institute’s Pipeline campaign workshop won their municipal elections on April 3.

Lynn Ricci attended the Pipeline to Local Office program this January and won a seat on the University City Council. Clayton Alderwoman Linda Goldstein was elected as Clayton’s first woman mayor. Her campaign manager, Kim Whittle was a Pipeline participant, along with Carol Scoville, campaign manager for Laurie Feldman, who won a seat in the St. Charles City Council.

Teresa Connelly, another alumnus of this January’s Pipeline to Local Office, lost her election for a position on the Union School Board by only 9 votes.

Institute Manager Dayna Stock said, “These women are diverse, dynamic, and determined to impact their communities. Our hope is that they will inspire other women to join them in their desire to make a difference.”

The candidates were among twelve people who came out on two chilly evenings to polish their skills and learn how to run successful campaigns for local office at the Institute’s annual Pipeline to Local Office program Jan. 23 and 25. Participants heard from current and former office holders who provided insight into the campaign process.

Fellow Pipeline alum Sonny Bhuttar, a Clayton School Board member, talked to the group about how she reached out to voters, and former Community College Board Trustee Mikki Brewster provided tips on public speaking. Pipeline participants also learned about fundraising and targeting voters.

Plan now to join us for Pipeline to Public Office!

In this nonpartisan program, participants will learn personal skills and organizational strategy that are the key elements in successful campaigns. This timely two-day workshop provides an opportunity for self-assessment to determine readiness to become a candidate or work on a campaign.

Statehouse Sisters urge women to be confident, challenge establishment

The Sue Shear Institute hosted its annual Statehouse Sisters programs on Feb. 23 at UM-St. Louis in honor of Black History Month and March 2 in Kansas City in honor of Women’s History Month.

Missouri Sen. Rita Days and Rep. Maria Chappelle-Nadal spoke in front of a group of about 50 students, faculty and staff and members of the public in the Millenium Student Center on the St. Louis campus.

They discussed the upcoming presidential election and whether the emerging field of candidates served as proof of a crack in the glass ceiling.

Days acknowledged the diversity of the candidates as a good sign but cautioned against getting overly excited to the point of overlooking their solid credentials.

“The crack is there since there is currently so much diversity on the presidential ticket with Barak Obama, an African American male, and Hilary Clinton, a woman,” Days said. “It is important to also see that they are credible candidates.”

Both legislators also discussed the role of women in getting involved in politics and encouraging others to do the same. Chappelle-Nadal said women not only “need the audacity to break the ceiling but confidence to get our foot in the door.”

Kansas City’s Statehouse Sisters program boasted a panel of the city’s powerhouse women leaders. Moderated by outgoing Kansas City Mayor Kay Barnes, the panel included Theresa Garza, Jackson County Legislator and alumna of the Sue Shear Pipeline to Politics program; Betty Knight, Platte County Presiding Commissioner; and Missouri Sen. Yvonne Wilson.

“It’s a Party: The Role of Political Parties in Running, Winning, and Serving” was the topic of the noon-hour session.

The panelists shared their stories and answered questions from the audience.

A common theme among all four women included the need to start any campaign at the grass roots level.

The women encouraged the audience to be willing to challenge “the establishment.” Knight used herself as an example, explaining that she started in a smaller role, on a Board of Education, which was an effective way to get into the game.

Wilson also spoke of the need for a terrific campaign leader. Garza’s mom filled the role for her and was by her side during the entire campaign.

The panelists agreed on the importance of women being represented, noting that many issues being debated are ones that specifically affect women, and yet are being decided by men.

When asked “How do we recruit more women candidates?” they encouraged the audience to identify women who would be effective in elected office, or on boards and commissions, and ask them to run. Maybe even ask them twice, or three times.

It was clear that, party differences aside, the four women elected officials shared a willingness to help each other and also to help other women gain success.

Chyanne Lockhart Cardarella to lobby on environmental legislation.

“I know that this area is perfect for wind energy, and I decided long ago that anything worthwhile takes the time and effort of a group of motivated individuals,” Chyanne says.

In addition, she is beginning her second two-year term as president of the League of Women Voters of Kansas City/Jackson, Clay and Platte Counties. Now 25, she was the youngest League president in the nation when she was first elected two years ago.

Chyanne’s accomplishments are all the more inspirational in light of personal obstacles she has overcome. She moved 20 times between kindergarten and fifth grade, and lived with eight families – changing schools each time - before she was thirteen-years-old.

“I chose at an early age not to let these negative circumstances define me,” Chyanne says. “Each family taught me a different set of values to live by, and for that I am thankful.”

She worked full-time to earn her college degree, taking only one student loan of $5,500 which she has already repaid.

A former legislative intern for Reps. Barbara Fraser and Ralph Monaco, Chyanne has aspirations of going to law school and running for office in a few years.

She describes the tenacity that has helped her overcome challenges as “a strength in my soul that refuses to take no for an answer.”
