Federal Judge to keynote Leadership Academy dinner

How does a journalism major and “on air” newscaster become a federal judge? While some of the requirements for this remarkable transition are hard work and determination, to learn what this evolution really entailed, join the 21st Century Leadership Academy fellows and staff at the Annual Keynote dinner, Thursday, May 22. Federal Magistrate Judge Nannette Baker will share how and why she switched careers.

Judge Baker’s life and career reflect her ability to embrace new adventures. She was born in Alabama, spent her childhood in Liberia, then moved to Tennessee and graduated from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. As a television journalist, she worked in Knoxville, Memphis, and St. Louis.

After graduating from St. Louis University Law School, Nanette clerked for a federal judge in Tennessee and then practiced law in St. Louis. During that time, she also served as Chair of the St. Louis Board of Election Commissioners. In 1999, Judge Baker was appointed to the Circuit Court in the City of St. Louis by Governor Carnahan and then elevated to Missouri’s Eastern District Court of Appeals by Governor Holden in 2004.

When Judge Baker became a Federal Magistrate in 2010, her responsibilities also included presiding over the Janis C. Good Mental Health Court. Currently, she is Vice Chair of the National Conference of Federal Trial Judges of the American Bar Association Judicial Division.

In addition to being a judge, Nanette Baker is an active member of the community, reaching out to help others succeed, especially women and girls. She is a member of the Board of Directors of Marram Middle School, and she facilitated the joint effort of the National Association of Women Judges and the Sue Shear Institute to create a Girls’ Summit educational program for middle school students in January 2014 (see page 5 for more information on this program).

2014 Amethyst Award winner motivated by passion to change Missouri laws

Without fancy dinners or the extensive rolodexes of some of her lobbyist counterparts at her disposal, Ellie Glenn is motivated by her passion for public service to get results in the capitol.

“Serving others is something I was always interested in, but the 21st Century Leadership Academy helped turn interest into action,” she says. So when given the chance to influence policy not long after graduation, Ellie was up for the challenge. In addition to working on political campaigns, she has held positions in the legislative and executive branches of Missouri government, helping shape the health care agenda and having a direct hand in the legislative process.

Currently, Ellie is the legislative liaison for the Department of Health and Senior Services, where she helps shape and advocate for policies that improve the health of Missourians.

Among her proudest accomplishments in this role is leading the effort to pass a law that requires

NAMES IN THE NEWS

Changes in Obama Cabinet
Kathleen Sebelius announced her resignation as Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Her decision to step down was announced just days after the deadline for Americans to enroll in health insurance exchanges as part of the Affordable Care Act, the implementation of which she oversaw during her tenure. President Obama announced that Sylvia Matthews Burwell, head of the Office of Management and Budget, would replace Secretary Sebelius. Burwell’s appointment is pending confirmation by the U.S. Senate.

In another key post at a federal agency, Portia Y. Wu was confirmed as the Assistant Secretary for Employment and Training Administration at the U.S. Department of Labor.

Women Represent the U.S. Around the World
In October 2013, Caroline Kennedy was confirmed as the U.S. Ambassador to Japan. Kennedy is the daughter of the late President John F. Kennedy, and the first woman to hold this post. Deborah Leah Birx has been confirmed as the Ambassador at Large and Coordinator of the United States Government Activities to Combat HIV/AIDS at the U.S. State Department after serving for nearly a decade at the CDC. In 2008, Dr. Birx retired from the Army as a Colonel.

Three-Woman Judicial Panel
Missouri’s 16th Circuit (Jackson County) Judicial Selection Commission took an unusual step when choosing the three-person panel for the Governor’s selection to fill a vacancy on their court. Following the death of Associate Circuit Judge Margaret Sauer, the five member commission selected Kimberly Fournier, Rebecca Lambert, and Janette Rodecap from among the 18 applicants.

Other key judicial appointments include Staci Michelle Yandle, who was appointed United States District Judge for the Southern District of Illinois; Abbie Crites-Leoni, appointed by U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri to serve as a U.S. Magistrate Judge in the Southeastern Division; and Noelle Collins, also a U.S. Magistrate Judge in the Eastern District.

Paris Elects First Female Mayor
Paris, the legendary capital of France, elected its first female mayor this Spring: Anne Hidalgo. A Spanish born civil servant, Hidalgo, 54, is a member of the Socialist party. She came to France as a child and claims an immigrant’s passion for her adopted country.

Jennifer Drake Fantroy joins Institute as its new Assistant Director

Jennifer Drake Fantroy has recently joined the Sue Shear Institute for Women in Public Life as Assistant Director. In addition to managing the 21st Century Leadership Academy and the UMSL LEAD Program, Jennifer will provide leadership for all the Institute’s programming and represent the organization both on campus and in the community. Her predecessor, Dayna Stock, is now working at the United Way of Greater St. Louis.

“I cannot think of a better way to apply everything I have learned from Vivian, Dayna and the Institute’s programs than to serve in this role,” Ms. Fantroy noted when accepting her new position. She is a 2005 graduate of the Leadership Academy. “I wholeheartedly believe that when women lead, they change for the better the way institutions work – their neighborhoods, community organizations, and government. I am honored to help provide the resources and support for women to achieve this goal.”

Before returning to her hometown of St. Louis for this position, Jennifer lived and worked in Washington, D.C., where she most recently served as the Assistant Director for State Support at The National Campaign to Prevent Teen and Unplanned Pregnancy. Jennifer also briefly served as a Barbara Jordan Health Policy Scholar at the Kaiser Family Foundation, assigned to the United States Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions (HELP) Committee. Prior to her nearly seven years in the nation’s capital, she worked and volunteered for organizations in Missouri to improve the health and well-being of women and families.
St. Louis Screening of “Geraldine Ferraro: Paving the Way”

The Sue Shear Institute extends its thanks to all who made the St. Louis screening of “Geraldine Ferraro: Paving the Way” a success. Our Host Committee and film attendees helped raise $1,995.00 in ticket sales alone. All proceeds from the screening will help underwrite the 21st Century Leadership Academy.

The screening of the documentary, which tells the story of the political trailblazer’s history-making campaign as Walter Mondale’s 1984 vice presidential nominee, garnered so much interest that the Institute had to upgrade to a larger theater to accommodate all of the guests. The event attracted a diverse crowd – some attendees reminisced on Geraldine’s run and how it inspired them, and other attendees were learning about this historical run for the first time.

After the film, Geraldine Ferraro’s daughter and filmmaker, Donna Zaccaro, spoke about the documentary and her mother’s contribution to public leadership.

The film “Geraldine Ferraro: Paving the Way” began airing on Showtime on March 22nd, 2014. It is available on Showtime Anytime until May 15th, 2015. For viewing, please visit: www.sho.com/sho/reality-docs/home.

Eileen Fisher Stores Support Women’s Leadership

The Institute was honored in March when the Eileen Fisher women’s apparel stores throughout the country selected the nationwide network of 22 university-based programs that encourage women’s civic engagement and leadership as the beneficiary of their semi-annual philanthropic day. As a result, 10% of sales on that day will be shared with the group. Graduates were encouraged to visit stores in their area to help share the message about strength and commitment acquired by participating in the 21st Century Leadership Academy.

The St. Louis store at Plaza Frontenac decorated its window with a sign echoing the motto created by the Center for Women in Public Life at Rutgers, “When Women Run, Women Win.” While the phrase doesn’t promise victory to every woman candidate, it does assert that office holders, who reflect the diversity of the electorate, create a stronger democracy. Reinforcing their commitment to women running for office, Eileen Fisher also sold the “how to” campaign book Every Day is Election Day during their “women in public life” promotion.

The Institute appreciates the generosity of the many shoppers and the opportunity to provide information about our mission and accomplishments to them.

Women well represented on August ballot

Women well represented on August ballot

Once the deadline passed on March 25, 2014, 83 women across the state had filed with the Secretary of State’s office to run for seats in Missouri government on the August 5th primary ballot.

In the Missouri House of Representatives, this includes an impressive 76 women running for 63 seats across the state. Currently, women hold 38 of the 163 seats in the House, 23 percent of all members of the chamber.

The picture for women currently serving in the Missouri Senate is slightly less impressive. Women, all of them Democrats, hold only five of the total 34 seats. Seven women have filed to run in the August primary – three Republicans and four Democrats.

‘Everybody can’t be Beyoncé’: 87 middle school girls get a lesson in life
By Maureen Ziegel, UMSL Daily

The room buzzed with the nervous, high-pitched voices of more than 80 middle school girls from diverse backgrounds brought together for a life lesson on success and making the right choices early in life. Brenda Stith Loftin, recently retired associate judge of the 21st Judicial Circuit, St. Louis County, Mo., had to lean in to hear the petite girl sitting next to her.

Loftin greeted the girls, their teachers and counselors for the first 2014 Girls Summit held Jan. 31 at the Millennium Student Center at the University of Missouri-St. Louis. It was organized by the Sue Shear Institute for Women in Public Life at UMSL and three members of the National Association of Women Judges.

“We figured this was a good age to start girls thinking about the options they have in their lives,” said Loftin, a UMSL alumna and past president of the NAJJ. “We wanted to bring them to a college campus and give them the opportunity to meet successful, professional women.”

Loftin was joined by Nannette Baker, U.S. district magistrate judge, Eastern District and Laninya Cason, associate circuit judge, 20th Judicial Circuit, St. Clair County, Ill. Both judges also are members of the NAJJ.

A team of UMSL students involved in the Sue Shear Institute’s LEAD Program guided the girls through various activities. The UMSL students, chosen for their leadership skills and interest in public policy, organized the Girls Summit program during the fall semester. They returned on Friday to see it come to fruition.

Tonya Chappell, a senior social work major, asked each girl to “tell us about yourself.”

“I like to laugh.”

“I’m African American and Dominican.”

“I play basketball, dance and sing.”

The three girls from Brittany Woods Middle School in University City, Mo., were getting to know the rest of the middle school girls at the table. Introducing yourself to strangers can be a difficult task, especially if you’re 13.

The middle school girls came from public and private schools in the city and county.

Annaly Eimann, a doctoral student in early childhood education and a LEAD Program participant, guided another group. Eimann comes from Namibia, a southeastern African nation that gained its independence from South Africa in 1990. She said she sought out the Sue Shear Institute program because of the emphasis on empowerment.

“I have been able to empower myself, in order to empower others,” Eimann said.

She looked across the room at the girls and talked about their counterparts in Africa. A teacher for many years, she plans to return home to effect change in her country’s education system. The middle school girls came from public and private schools in the city and county.

An aspiring attorney, a chief executive officer, a dentist, a graphic designer, a teacher, a social worker, a psychology professor and judges—the young girls were interacting with women who had reached or were well on their way to reaching successful careers. They all had a message on how to get there, none stronger than Judge Cason from East St. Louis, Ill.

“Everybody can’t be Beyoncé,” Cason said. “So start right now thinking about what you want to do. You will not be able to do it unless you get an education.”

Cason recited her education credentials. She graduated from Lincoln High School in East St. Louis, Ill., attended the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign where she earned a bachelor’s degree in finance and a masters degree in education. She earned a law degree from the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. She became a full-time attorney with the national law firm of Hinshaw & Culbertson and a partner in 2001.

In 2003, Cason was sworn in as an associate circuit judge for St. Clair County, Ill., becoming one of the youngest sitting judges in the state. That courtroom has provided her with a view of young people that many of the girls in the room may have never seen.

“I see girls in trouble all the time” Cason said. “Don’t let anybody use you or abuse you because you can’t be a grown woman with a baby when you’re 13. You want bigger things in your life. You want a paycheck, not a government card.

“Look in the mirror and ask yourself, ‘What can I be?’” she told the girls. “You are your most valuable asset. Be a lawyer, be an accountant, be a doctor, be a beautiful black woman. And go to school.”

According to Nannette Baker, the NAJJ has a similar program called “The Color of Justice” targeting girls and minority high school students to consider pursuing careers in criminal justice.

“But the NAJJ wanted to reach younger girls,” Baker said. “They are at an age where we think we can have a positive impact on their lives. We want them to know there are choices out there for them. We couldn’t have done this without the help of the Sue Shear Institute and UMSL. We are so pleased with the turnout.”

Other presenters for the daylong event included Rhonda Gray, director of Almost Home, a St. Louis shelter for teenage mothers, and Angela Lewis, a motivational speaker, former Division I college athlete and coach, and author of “The Game Changing Assist: Six Simple Ways to Choose Success.”
Alumni News

Dressing for the Institute’s Success

On Presidents’ Day, 2014 the non-profit St. Louis resale shops Rung & Sprung Boutique donated a portion of their sales revenue to the Sue Shear Institute for Women in Public Life. Executive Director Mallarie Zimmer said, “We know the day will come when we’re honoring women on Presidents’ Day and we’ll thank the Sue Shear Institute for that.”

The store specializes in women’s career, casual and formal apparel and kids’ and maternity merchandise. Traditionally, their primary beneficiaries are the Women’s Foundation of Greater St. Louis and Nurses for Newborns.

“It’s time for a woman president and Governor, which is why the Sue Shear Institute will be our Presidents’ Day beneficiary again in 2015,” Zimmer noted. For more information about this organization, visit www.shoprung.org.

screening for congenital heart defects for all newborns in the state, a law that experts say will help prevent about 50 infant deaths each year.

Ellie, a native of Louisiana, Missouri, is a 2007 Shear Fellow and graduated from Truman State University the same year with a Bachelor’s Degree in Political Science. In receiving the honor of the Amethyst Award, Ellie said, “I am thankful for the opportunities I have been given to work for Missouri, and I plan to continue to serve as best I can.”

The Amethyst Award is underwritten by St. Louis philanthropist Ruth Siteman and recognizes a Shear Fellow who has inspired others by applying the skills and knowledge she gained at the 21st Century Leadership Academy. Ellie will receive an unrestricted cash award of $1,000 at the 21st Century Leadership Academy keynote dinner on May 22, 2014.

Successful April for Institute alums!

Sue Shear Institute Advisory Board Member and newly-elected Town & Country Alderman, Linda Rallo with Pipeline graduates Lisa Brenner and Patricia Zahn
