Ideas Which Are Needed to Coalesce Support for International Projects

--It takes listening with the third ear for educational needs which appear and you are able to fill them,

--It takes a willingness to consider undertaking what may seem to be the most unimportant work, which could possibly emerge in something much larger that would have been anticipated at first,

--It takes keeping focused on your area of expertise and knowing what you have to contribute,

--It takes developing coalitions and involving many partners to contribute to the success of what you wish to accomplish,

--It takes determination to identify just what you are willing to invest in a given situation,

--It takes “staying the course” when no one else believes that what you are concentrating on has any merit,

--It takes sensitivity to realize an opportunity to realize an opportunity and taking advantage of it when it arises, and,

--It takes additional things which may strike you and me in the future of which we are not presently aware.
