Multimedia in your Article!

Did you know that Elsevier journals accept electronic supplementary material to support and enhance your research?

Supplementary Multimedia Data in your Article!

Publish videos, sound clips & more!

Supplementary files offer authors additional possibilities to publish supporting applications, movies, animation sequences, high-resolution images, background datasets, sound clips and more.

Why not submit a multimedia article

CiteAlert

CiteAlert is a new and free automated service to notify authors when their articles are cited in an Elsevier journal.

CiteAlert automatically notifies authors by e-mail soon after their work is referenced in a newly published article in an Elsevier journal.

Authors are eligible to receive CiteAlert notifications if their article has been indexed by Scopus. Self-citations are not included.

Ethical issues may emerge either during the reviewing process or after publication such as:

- Plagiarism
- Research results not being original to purported author
- Allegations about authorship of contributions
- Double submission

Elsevier has developed an online resource kit which contains information, procedures and guidelines to help you deal with such issues in a fair and consistent way. Find the kit at www.elsevier.com/publishingethicskit
