Bachelor of Educational Studies (BES)

with an emphasis in Youth & Adult Development

This program prepares you to help agencies and organizations fulfill their educational missions. Skills and insights gained can be applied as innovative educators, program managers, activity directors, trainers and curriculum developers. Learn current best practices for effective teaching of youth and adults outside of a traditional classroom setting, educational theories and practice, curriculum development in informal education, human development, diversity, advocacy and family partnerships. Enjoy internship opportunities in the St. Louis region in a variety of field and community based suburban and urban experiences. Tailor your culminating experience to your professional and future career goals.

Career Outlook

Many not-for-profit institutions, governmental and non-governmental organizations that are outside the traditional structure of schools have staff members and clients who need training and education. Employment opportunities exist in organizations that work with after-school and youth programs, programs for special needs audiences and not-for-profit organizations that provide counseling and emergency services. This degree program does not lead to Missouri teacher certification.
