Byrne to speak on campus violence

The former executive director of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest, William Matthew Byrne, Jr., will speak on campus disruptions at 11:45 a.m. Friday, Mar. 12, in room 105 Benton Hall.

Byrne was a member of a Los Angeles law firm when he was appointed United States Attorney for the central district of the California in March, 1967, by former president Lyndon Johnson. Byrne served on this capacity until 1970 when president Richard M. Nixon made him chairman of his committee on Campus Unrest.

Byrne's UMSL visit is sponsored by the University Program Board in cooperation with the Administration of Justice Program.

Athletic fee hike debated by panel

By MARY GLYNN
Current Staff Writer

The $4.50 increase in athletic fees, approved at the Feb. 19 meeting of the Board of Curators, was the topic of discussion at an "open line" forum last Tuesday.

Student interest, if judged by the attendance figures, was not overwhelming. In addition, less than a dozen of the estimated eighty students present directed questions at the panel of Chancellor Glen R. Driscoll; Dr. William Hamlin, chairman of the athletic committee; David R. Ganz, dean of student affairs; and student president Barry Kaufman.

Defending his committee's actions, Hamlin said, "After some questions had been raised regarding an increase in fees, I took another look at the athletic committee's position and I was unable to come up with any feelings that we did anything incorrect. If we (the athletic committee) want to extend an intramural program, it takes money."

Discussion of a fee hike arose last spring when Coach Smith requested a larger budget for 1971-72.

The $4.50 figure was suggested at the Nov. 25 meeting of the athletic committee, which agreed on the necessity for an increase at its January meeting.

Driscoll pointed out, "There were two students on the athletic committee. They must communicate with the students and their decisions must be representative of the students."

"The job of the athletic committee is to review and recommend policies to be used in athletics. If the students on the committee do not do their job and communicate their decisions to the rest of the students, it is not my place to bird dog them into it."

This prompted a remark that two students, outnumbered three to one on the athletic committee, cannot be considered representative of the student body as a whole.

Continuing the discussion, Kaufman maintained, "There are bodies set up to discuss policy changes regarding the students, as the Central Council. Talking about a raise in activity fees is something for the students to consider themselves."

"The Central Council asked the chancellor and the Faculty Senate to wait before passing a fee hike, so a referendum could be held and the students could voice their opinions, but the requests of the Central Council were ignored."

Driscoll agreed that student opinion should be sought, but he added, "Not necessarily through referendum, then the committee structure would be unnecessary. The committee was created to represent faculty and students."

A student in the crowd retorted that a committee with two students outnumbered by faculty can't be considered representative, and that since everything was controlled by the administration, "you don't have student activities, you have faculty-approved activities, so why increase student activity fees?"

Smith said, "I am hired to administer the athletic program. I think the image of a state university is improved with a better athletic program. To extend the program you need more money."

Kaufman responded, "Surely the students should be consulted if there is to be an increase in their activity fees to support their athletic programs."

He also mentioned that the Rolla and Kansas City campuses recently have been the only state schools to increase fees and both did so with a student referendum.

The general dispute had been over the manner of effecting the increase, rather than the fee hike itself.

Many students voiced the opinion that student activities should be viewed differently from legislative appropriations, with students allowed a voice in the decisions affecting student activity fees.

Hook calls students major menace academic freedom

By MARGARET JENSEN
Current Staff Writer

Students themselves are among the major threats to academic freedom, according to Dr. Sidney Hook. Hook, philosophy professor at New York University, lectured here Friday on "The Future of the University."

Radical students who storm universities demanding that they take action against certain governmental policies should not be blaming the schools.

A university cannot solve the nation's problems; it can only train people in the hope that they can make better voting decisions, according to Hook.

Students should seek changes through the government rather than the universities.

Hook blamed the administrators for giving in to the students. He felt that a university is not destroyed because its buildings are torn down. It is destroyed when the administrators change policies which they really feel are necessary.

Hook defined academic freedom as the freedom of qualified teachers to teach their fields and beliefs with no restrictions, and the freedom of students to learn.

The freedom to teach must be earned but the freedom to learn is a human right and should be given to everyone, he said, adding that it is our duty to remove all obstacles so that everyone is given the opportunity to learn.

He maintained that students have the right to regulate their own social lives as long as none of their actions threaten the goals of the university and none of their decisions discriminate against minorities.

They have the right to be heard and to receive explanations on any measures that affect them, Hook concluded.

Stiffer library patrols aimed at reducing noise

By RITA SIMON
Current Staff Writer

An experiment to reduce the noise level on the fourth floor of the library was conducted March 4-5 and again last week.

In a statement which instructors were requested to announce in their classes, Chancellor Glen R. Driscoll approved the use of security patrols to discourage misconduct.

He said the experiment would be extended beyond March 12 if necessary.

During the experiment, the two officers on duty in the library rotated shifts between the exit desk and patrol of the building.

In addition to checking out books, the guard at the exit desk was to prevent any food from entering the building, and quiet any groups which were engaged in conversation as they entered the library.

The guard on patrol was to eliminate all eating, card playing, and general misconduct, in order to keep the noise level to a minimum.

Offenders, if they refused to desist, were asked to leave the library.

If they refused to leave, the guard would call the Security Office to have them removed.

This would require that the offender's name and student number be passed on directly to the Office of the Dean of Students for disciplinary action.

In addition to patrolling level four, the guard was to check level five at least once each hour.

Miss Susan Freegard, head librarian, emphasized the importance of such an experiment to create a "more business-like atmosphere" on the fourth floor.

Miss Freegard also stated that "four person carrels" will be established in the area in an attempt to eliminate unnecessary socializing.

The front lounge has been removed for the same purpose.

She suggested that the idea may "spread on to other floors" if peace and quiet can be effectively maintained.

However, a few regular "fourth floor-goers" foresee complications in the plan.

"In a commuter college such as ours, there is little time between working and attending classes to see one's friends," stated Mickey Boul, a sophomore in Sociology. "The library provides a cleaner atmosphere than the crowded and dirty lunchrooms. It's the only time to find out what's been going on."

Many students offer similar views.

Kevin McCann, a senior in Business, added that "students do not limit the tables to four. They bring six or seven chairs to one table which inevitably makes it noisier. No one really has any intention of talking at first, but it only takes one person who doesn't feel like studying to start things going."

He sees this as primarily due to the large number of "cliques" which congregate on level four.

The solution, according to a consensus of opinion, seems to rest in the Student Union Building, now under construction. Many students feel that when the "Union" is completed, the problem will disappear.

Although these explanations and comments are valid for the students, the noise is still a major problem for officials and students alike who wish to see the library remain a quiet study area.

In view of this, the experiment, the partitioning of tables, and the removal of the lounge is a well-planned effort to eliminate the problem.

Wisconsin violence veteran new Newman chaplain

By JIM GURNEY
Current Staff Writer

Father Bernard J. Nienhaus, who recently joined the staff at Newman House as a chaplain, is enthusiastic about his new job. "This is a beautiful campus," he remarked, commenting on the students as well as the buildings. Nienhaus served at Washington University from 1965 to 1967, before transferring to the University of Wisconsin for further education.

"The Ford Foundation granted me a study of high school graduates," he explained. "I studied job patterns of young people who were not going to college. I found that they were offered jobs of a lower level."

Nienhaus received a doctorate degree in counseling at the University of Wisconsin, and was there during the student violence last year.

"I guess I was there at an exciting time," he said. "The National Guard remained on campus for one week. The students were demanding a voice about activities on the campus and in the nation."

The university, located in Madison, Wisconsin, has an enrollment of 34,000 students in an area only slightly larger than this campus. "It was a psychological victory for the students over an unprepared administration," Nienhaus remarked.

He explained that his role at Newman House will be to serve all of the students.

"Everybody speaks in terms of functions today," he said, "so the question is how do I justify my existence. My concern is with the people on this campus, helping them to grow morally. I am someone whom they can talk to."

He pointed out that he has an advantage over the faculty.

"There is nothing at stake when they (students) talk with me," Nienhaus stressed, "because they don't have to worry about grades or later consequences. They can talk about things that are really bothering them."

He toured the campus on Monday, his first day here, and was impressed with the spacious environment.

"The buildings aren't as big, tall, and crowded as in Madison," Nienhaus commented. "There is a certain tranquility as you walk around."

He observed that the university is located in a convenient place in relation to the city.

"You are fortunate to be next to a nice residential area," he said. "I think I'm going to like it here. There is a good spirit among college students that I admire."

Newman APO sponsor tutoring project

A tutoring project begun in January under the sponsorship of the Newman House and Alpha Phi Omega is currently available to all students attending UMSL. This service is provided free of charge.

The main need at the moment is tutors. Those interested in tutoring need at least 2.0 grade average in all course, 2.5 GPA in the area of major, and sophomore status or higher.

Enrollment increase expected in September

The anticipated completion this fall of the classroom portion of the combined Social Sciences, Business and Education building will enable UMSL to accept additional students for the 1971 fall semester, Chancellor Glen R. Driscoll announced recently.

At present, enrollment is approximately 9600. An increase of about 900 students is expected next year.

Freshmen enrollment on campus last fall was limited to 1400 and the University was forced to turn away some 500 otherwise qualified freshmen. It will not be necessary to turn away such students next fall, said Driscoll.

He added that applications will be accepted for the fall semester until the normal cutoff date, July 1. Applications accepted after July 1 will be as space permits. No restrictions have been placed on the upper class transfers or evening college students who will be accepted.

When completed, the four-story classroom section will contain 28 classrooms and two 325-seat auditoriums. Classroom space on campus will be increased 40 per cent by the building's completion and will provide some relief to the overcrowded conditions, as well as allowing an increase in enrollment.

The 13-story tower containing primarily faculty and staff offices is not expected to be completed until early 1972. Only with completion of the Arts and Sciences building, also scheduled for early 1972, will UMSL experience true space relief, Driscoll said.

Two other projects, the combined University Center-J.C. Penney Continuing Education building and a multi-purpose building are also due for completion this fall.

Young Democrats reorganize ; plan participation in MISL

The first general meeting of the reorganized Young Democrats Club will be held March 15 at 12:45 p.m. in the Annex Lounge.

"Efforts have been made to re-establish a Young Democrats club at UMSL in order to provide a relevant structure for political action for college students," according to a statement by the group's leaders.

Immediate organization plans include campus speakers, discussion groups, participation in the Missouri Intercollegiate Student Legislature and examination of elections which affect the students of UMSL.

For further information, contact Kim Pepple at 962-8460, or Bill Sharpe at 863-8324.

Library changes graduate student book circulation policy

Changes in the library's circulation policy to graduate students were announced recently by Miss Susan Freegard, librarian. Graduate students are now allowed to charge out books for home use for four weeks.

Books may be renewed for a second four-week period by bringing them back to the Circulation Desk. No renewals will be made by phone.

Miss Freegard, in a letter to Dr. Robert Sullivan, dean of Graduate School, also states that journals will not be circulated to graduate students.

Teaching assistants, who will be considered graduate students as far as library policies are concerned and graduate students are subject to the same overdue fees as undergraduates.

Business seminar to be presented

A two-day seminar focusing on behavioral science concepts in management decision-making will be presented March 12-13 by the extension division and School of Business Administration.

The program, entitled "Management 1971: Out of the Shadow," will be held at Pere Marquette Lodge.

It is intended for businessmen holding middle-level responsibilities in local and regional companies.

The object of the conference is to study the application of behavioral science to supervisor-subordinate relationships and management practices.

Dr. Steven Norton, assistant professor of management here, will be an instructor at the seminar. Norton, who holds a Ph. D. degree in industrial psychology, has worked as a psychologist for the Personnel Research and Development Corporation of Cleveland.

Also participating as an instructor will be Harold J. Schneider, manager of organizational development at the Monsanto Company.

He has worked extensively with behavioral science in its application to organizational structure in industry.

For further information on this program, contact J. C. McCurdy at 453-5961.

Band to perform March 14

The 60-member Concert Band under the direction of Dr. Warren Bellis, will give a free, public concert at 3 p.m. Sunday, March 14.

The band will perform a widely varied program, including Clifton Williams' "Concertino for Percussion and Band," symphonic movements by Jadin and Borodin, a suite of Renaissance style instrumental music by Hovhannes and Francis McBeth's "Masque."

Also on the program are "A Jazz Suite" by Robert Mersey and marches in both the traditional and Spanish styles.

Bellis is an associate professor of music.

U Players give one-act plays

A night of one-acts will be presented by the University Players March 19-20 at 8:00 p.m. in room 105, Benton Hall.

Included in the performances will be Hello Out There, The Typist, and Aria de Capo. Admission is free.

Library noise: an airtight solution

The past week's experiment in reducing the noise level in the library, level four in particular, should be applauded as a fine effort towards tackling the perennial affliction which besets this campus.

However, the concept of quiet patrols is only the most recent attempt in the series, following the plan for student monitors to augment the signs which ineffectually remind students of the need for silence.

We have no way of knowing whether this latest effort will enjoy greater success than its predecessors. It has already been proven that the honor system doesn't influence people who are bound to talk wherever they go, so library officials have more or less been forced to employ other means.

The probable next step in the escalation of hostilities between library officials and offenders will no doubt come when the dining-and-talking set determines the timetable for the guard's rounds, very likely accompanied by the posting of sentries to watch for the approach of the patrolling monitor.

This kind of cat-and-mouse game might go on indefinitely, without accomplishing anything.

Another method officials could look into might seem somewhat drastic, but results are guaranteed.

This foolproof scheme, suggested by a former occupant of an institution for the criminally insane, involves pumping the oxygen out of the building to create a vacuum, since it is well-known that sound can't travel in a vacuum. This would also solve the problem of eating in the library, since the lack of oxygen would inhibit dining by making respiration impossible without a breathing apparatus which would seriously cramp anyone's eating style.

There might also be some drawbacks entailed in this, such as the prohibitive cost of a large supply of such contraptions, but what's a little more expense when silence is concerned?

If this should fall short of the intended goal, it's hard to conceive of any device that would do the trick.

COMMENTARY: Editorials and Opinions

Dear Editor,

However noble or ignoble the quoter's motives, I am weary of having my 1969 study of students quoted out of context. Most recently it has been reported that this study was "disavowed by Gilman himself." Rather than "disavowing" it, allow me to quote from the study's summary of its own validity (page 14, copies of which have been available in the library and the Dean of Student Affairs office):

The aborted nature of the student census casts a shadow of doubt over any interpretation made on these data. The omission of evening school students and of newly registered students as well as a probable bias toward the exclusion of the less affluent and the less psychologically aggressive argue against its acceptance at all. However, by excluding the evening school student from any consideration, the high proportion of response combined with the lack of bias on such critical characteristics as sex and marital status suggest that the data are not entirely without value. Thus, if viewed with caution, the Student Census may well provide important information.

It, thus, should be clear that my labored discussion of the study's known biases have been intentionally mistaken for a repudiation of the study itself.

Quite to the contrary, I will argue that this study was more representative of student opinion than the referendum, planned for next week, can hope to be. First, the study's administration was carefully planned to get a response from those most apathetic to UMSL who will be grossly under-represented by the referendum. Second, no past referendum has ever approached (nor is this one likely to approach) in proportion or number the study's 66 per-cent response rate based upon 3275 respondents. Finally, the bias weaknesses cited above are the most important advantage the study has over the referendum. Because it has to be anonymous, the biases of the referendum response must remain unknown. To the extent that the referendum response is less than 50 per cent, these unknown biases very seriously jeopardize the creditability of any such measure of student opinion.

In conclusion, there remains a need for the professional measure of UMSL student and faculty attitudes such as were attempted once a year in 1967, 1968, and 1969. It is a pity that those who most need the results of such work are least likely to give it the cooperation, respect and financial backing it requires.

Arithmetic

Dear Editor,

In recent weeks the Board of Curators has enacted a $4.50 increase per semester in Student Activity Fees. The primary purpose of this fee increase is to boost intercollegiate and intramural athletics at UMSL. Let us do a little arithmetic. There is to a first approximation 10,000 students at UMSL. At $4.50 per student and 10,000 students for two semesters per year, this amounts to an approximate $100,000 increase in the athletic budget.

This fee increase is outrageous. However, never let it be said that I would knock the system without offering a positive alternative. It would be far more profitable if the University would install pecuniary locks on the stalls in all the rest rooms at UMSL, and donate the proceeds to the athletic budget.

Now let us again do a little arithmetic. The average student would participate about 2-1/2 times a day. At 10¢ a crack times 2-1/2 times per day times 10,000 students times 75 days per semester times 2 semesters per year, this would amount to some $375,000. With an expanding enrollment and the combined participation of the faculty, staff and visitors, the income would automatically rise to keep up with the inflation and the growing needs of the Athletic Department. This would appear to be a better way to handle the situation.

John O'Connor

Cooperation

Dear Editor,

The grievance committee believes it has found an answer to the athletic fee hike problem. The university should install pay toilets in all restrooms. It would require one million trips at ten cents a throw to achieve the goal of $10,000, but with the help of the Canteen Corporation this goal could be met.

Since the Canteen Corporation has been bold enough to poison and rob the student body, they would certainly agree to put laxative in all the food.

In addition to answering that enough money would be collected, this would also mean shorter classes since most teachers would also be under Canteen's spell.

This may also put some fun into campus life, since students would have ample opportunity to play the burning-bag-on-the-porch trick on the Chancellor.

I was pleased in reading Carole Kerr's letter. She made a prophetic point. We must change the priority that anyone who wants to learn about guns can. We must change the precedence that anyone who wants to own a gun can.

I feel if the Rifle Club encourages the education and use of guns without knowing the type of person it is dealing with, then the club should be condemned as a menace to everyone.

"If two Nazi Stormtroopers were killing your grandmother would you resort to deadly force to repel them?" Everyday across the country, applicants for the conscientious objector exemption are being asked this, or a similar question.

Such a question would only be amusing were it not the source of some very real problems. In many cases, the local board members asking the question actually believe it is pivotal: if the young man is willing to kill the Stormtrooper, he cannot qualify for the exemption. Many young men also believe the question is significant since it is asked so often. These young men may decide not to apply for the C.O. exemption because they are willing to kill the Stormtrooper. Or they may quietly accept a I-A classification. Or they may be tempted to compromise their convictions and allow their grandmothers to die.

In fact, however, whether a young man would actually kill the Nazi or not has no legal bearing upon his qualifications for the conscientious objector classification. The courts have repeatedly and uniformly distinguished between a willingness to use force and a willingness to participate in war.

The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, for example, recently decided that: "The statute providing exemption for conscientious objectors does not speak of objection to force, but rather conscientious objection to 'participation in war in any form.' . . . Agreement that force can be used to restrain wrongdoing, especially as the last alternative, has little bearing on an attitude toward war. We would not expect a full-fledged conscientious objector to stand by while a madman sprayed Times Square with machine gun bullets, or while an assassin took aim at the President."

In light of court decisions such as this one, why do local boards still continue to import Nazi Stormtroopers into the local board hearing? This reporter asked Draft Director Dr. Curtis Tarr. He responded: "Now, if I were a member of a local board, I would ask many questions that (registrants) thought were unfair because I want the real registrant to come out. It's just like when I'm teaching a class. I try to ask all kinds of provocative questions. You've read Plato. You know what Socrates did. You ask questions that you think will provoke the person to say what he really believes. So you ask all kinds of leading questions. You see, I don't make up my mind that he's not a conscientious objector just because he says, 'Sure, I'd defend my grandmother.' But I might begin to get some information by which I can begin to examine what that guy really thinks."

Using provocative questions to determine a registrant's sincerity is legitimate. Sincerity is one of the requirements for the CO exemptions. The manner in which a registrant answers a question is a legitimate consideration in determining his sincerity. Local boards, therefore, often ask difficult question which may force a registrant to reveal that he has not thought about war and killing very much.

For example, boards often C.O. applicants whether they are willing to pay taxes and thereby participate in the purchase of war machines which will eventually be used to kill people. Of course, the C.O. exemption is not restricted to tax resisters. However, registrants who have not thought about such questions often become confused and contradictory. Such responses provide a basis for denying the exemption since they reflect adversely upon the registrant's sincerity.

Therefore, any young man seeking the C.O. exemption should prepare himself for questions which may not relate directly to this qualifications for exemption. Though not directly relevant to his case, these questions are important in determining a registrant's sincerity.

The rules outlined above have resulted from a number of court cases over the past few years. Undoubtedly, some local board members are not aware of these cases.

Record belies JV talent

The junior varsity basketball team completed a rather dreary season with a surprising victory over the tough Missouri Baptist Trojans, thus finishing with a slate of 4-11.

This brought an end to the most frustrating season in JV history. "The talent is there," said coach Arnold Copeland time after time during the season. But that talent was seldom evident.

Woody Steitz, the fourth leading scorer on the junior varsity squad, drives for a layup in the JV win over Missouri Baptist.

The Missouri Baptist game was one of those few occasions. The Trojans had defeated both Florissant Valley and Boys Club during the season. "We weren't able to do that," said Copeland. Yet the Rivermen stopped MoBap, 86-84.

"We had good offense," said Copeland, "but we didn't seem to want to play both end of the court. The players did not appreciate the value of the ball," he said of the team that specialized in sloppy ballhandling and poor defense.

The junior Red and Gold stopped the Southeast Missouri JV, the William Jewell JV and Sanford Brown in their other victories.

Forward Mike Pratt led the team both in scoring and rebounds with a 13.9 scoring average and 9.7 bounds per game. Butch Willis was next in both categories with 13.8 points and 6.5 rebounds per games.

Bill Harris scored at a 12.9 clip, Jim Steitz averaged 12.3 and Mike Dunlap finished with 10.9.

On December 21st, the Rivermen were well on their way to upsetting the Arkansas Razorbacks at Fayetteville, Arkansas, with a halftime advantage of 54-41.

January 28---The Red and Gold had the Western Illinois Leathernecks at their mercy, 46-37.

February 3---Eastern Illinois, on their way to the NAIA District finals, trailed a hustling St. Louis team, 42-37, at the half.

These games are three examples of Riverman inability to play consistently competent basketball. All three had one trait in common

--the result. In each case the team came back to lose the lead and the game.

It was a so-so season, at best. The team that was considered by many the most talented to play for the Red and Gold, met one disappointment after another.

But there were high points. On three occasions during the 12-12 season the squad "put it all together" and put it to three very surprised opponents.

On December 19, the Rivermen smashed Northeast Missouri, 100-77. The Bulldogs were eventually to compete for the NCAA District 5 Championship after a 16-6 season.

The Red and Gold stopped Rockhurst at home, 87-84 in the most exciting contest of the season and then took on Concordia in yet another Viking Ha!! thriller.

The Preachers came to Normandy with revenge in their hearts after losing all eight previous meetings with the Rivermen. That string is now nine, Concordia losing 85-74.

Another highlight was the performance of Doody Rohn, who became UMSL's career rebounding leader with 580. Rohn also climbed to second place on the all-time scoring list with 722 markers.

Mark Bernsen and Clarence Slaughter captured fourth and fifth place in scoring with career totals of 530 and 520 points respectively.
