Singer, Burr (Bernice)	"Loading on the Levee" (1938)	Work/paper Drawing, Charcoal	5/16/2011	Singer (1912-1992) was born in St. Louis, but moved to Los Angeles in 1939. She also studied at the Art Student's League and worked in Taos. She became a popular and very well-known watercolorist in S. Calif. Selected as part of the Missouri collection for the New York World's Fair of 1939 and included in the Artists for Victory Exhibition at the N.Y. Metro. Art Museum in 1942. Much of her early work depicted African-American imagery, and the plight of the African -American community, and (perhaps for this reason) she is sometimes referred to as an African -American artist. Sources that B. Feldacker contacted (see research material) who knew Singer or were close to her confirmed that this was erroneous. Note: this drawing appears to be a study for a painting of basically the same waterfront scene done the same year. Ivey-Selkirk Auction House confirmed that the drawing was on consignment from an L.A. gallery which may have represented Burr's estate. It is possible she retained this drawing from St. Louis when she moved west.	384

This project bid price was the largest commission paid by the Treasury Section of Fine Arts for a post office mural. Siporin went on to become the first Chair of the Fine Arts Department at Brandeis University.	425
