									The Body and Gender in China Same as HONORS 2330 and GS 2150. Topic: The Body and Gender in China This course focuses on "the gendered body" in China. While it will cover the historical background of the culture of the body and concepts of gender starting from the late 19th century, the greater part of the readings and discussion will concentrate on contemporary China. It will examine how the great social changes have influenced concepts of health, sports, beauty, femininity, masculinity, and sexuality. It traces these changes through the encounter with the West, Communist revolution, and market consumerism. It examines questions such as: How does Chinese traditional medicine influence concepts of body and gender? How has the shift from socialism to consumerism affected ideas about the body, gender, and sexuality? How has the government-led push for Olympic gold medals influenced the culture of the body? How is globalization affecting traditional martial arts? Is China becoming "Westernized" and losing its traditional ideals of body and gender?

				History and Culture of Medicine  Topic: History and Culture of Medicine Although all human beings share a fundamental biology, the way in which they interpret it varies greatly across cultures. Students will explore beliefs and practices related to anatomy, disease, sexual reproduction and gender, sport and exercise, and food, with the goal of comprehending how medicine is shaped by its cultural context. The focus will be on a comparison of Western biomedicine with Chinese medicine from the time of the ancient Greeks to today. There will be some discussion of other non-Western traditions such as shamanic, Native American, Tibetan, and Ayurvedic. The course will also compare the institutions that organize medical practice, and will discuss the clash between traditional and modern medical systems in the course of modernization.

										The Body and Gender in China Same as ANTHRO 2191 and HONORS 2330. Topic: The Body and Gender in China This course focuses on "the gendered body" in China. While it will cover the historical background of the culture of the body and concepts of gender starting from the late 19th century, the greater part of the readings and discussion will concentrate on contemporary China. It will examine how the great social changes have influenced concepts of health, sports, beauty, femininity, masculinity, and sexuality. It traces these changes through the encounter with the West, Communist revolution, and market consumerism. It examines questions such as: How does Chinese traditional medicine influence concepts of body and gender? How has the shift from socialism to consumerism affected ideas about the body, gender, and sexuality? How has the government-led push for Olympic gold medals influenced the culture of the body? How is globalization affecting traditional martial arts? Is China becoming "Westernized" and losing its traditional ideals of body and gender?

									The Body and Gender in China Same as Anthro 2191. Same as Gender Studies 2151. Topic: The Body and Gender in China. This course focuses on "the gendered body" in China. While it will cover the historical background of the culture of the body and concepts of gender starting from the late 19th century, the greater part of the readings and discussion will concentrate on contemporary China. It will examine how the great social changes have influenced concepts of health, sports, beauty, femininity, masculinity, and sexuality. It traces these changes through the encounter with the West, Communist revolution, and market consumerism. It examines questions such as: How does Chinese traditional medicine influence concepts of body and gender? How has the shift from socialism to consumerism affected ideas about the body, gender, and sexuality? How has the government-led push for Olympic gold medals influenced the culture of the body? How is globalization affecting traditional martial arts? Is China becoming "Westernized" and losing its traditional ideals of body and gender?
